Consumer agency criticized by Chamber

CANTON—Residents of the township may yet have their own consumer's agency—but it won't be with the approval of the Chamber of Commerce.

The resolution for the five-man agency was introduced Tuesday to the board and tabled for further discussion. Bart Berg, President of the Canton Chamber of Commerce submitted a letter to the board, stating the proposed ordinance had generated "alarm and concern with the chamber and in the business community."

Berg commented, "We do not question the sincerity of purpose of this document nor of the authors, however, we feel it is a sure step toward closing the door for future commercial and business development in the township.

"There is no quarrel with the township board about businesses being licensed, but there is grave concern about the agency that is delegated to administer the licensing and to the use of the licensing fees that would be established."

THE ORDINANCE stipulates that all businesses will be licensed, and that the revenue generated by the licenses would go toward the operating budget of the consumer agency. The licensing power could be used to punish merchants using bad business practices.

It was authored by trustee Bob Myers and local attorney Peter Bundarin, a resident of the Holiday Park subdivision.

Myers commented, "The resolution was tabled for study and the board has stated it is more than willing to talk to not only the chamber and businessmen, but all residents who would like input into the proposal.

"Personally, I would like the opportunity to show them their fears are unfounded. They should have no reason to think that such a consumer agency would want to put honest merchants out of business. We are aiming at those who are unscrupulous operators and those that can't back their products.

"The community should have an agency that has the power to license and regulate businesses.

MYERS SAID the same has been done in Detroit and other cities and has worked "very well." Licensing fees are planned to finance the operation of the agency. It will serve as both a watchdog, and hopefully lure more consumers into the township knowing they have a way to get a redress of grievances.

"As for the necessity of having an agency in Canton I have talked to people at the Wayne County Consumer Protection Agency and they tell me their caseload is so high now they can't handle all the complaints they receive."

The trustee added, "They told me that they would like to see every community form an agency because it

THE STORY OF PLYMOUTH Salem's 59-53 loss to Flint Northwestern in the semi-final round of the Michigan Class A basketball tournament is told in the faces of two Salem cheerleaders as the tears stream down while the clock runs out.

Area 'basketball fever' climbs to epidemic stages

By R. T. THOMPSON

The Plymouth community, including the city, township and Canton Township, has the worst case of "basketball fever" in its entire history. Oftentimes the "fever" hits about half the residents in a community but this epidemic struck and struck hard.

Oldtimers, who remember the big "flu" epidemic that hit after World War I, say it is nothing compared to the way the community has supported the Plymouth Salem Rocks in the tournament wars.

Woe betide the one who says basketball is getting too much play these days. He is quickly told the facts of life...this is the community's best high school basketball team and it may be years before another of this caliber is put together.

"JUST THE MERE mention that Plymouth might have lost before getting into the semifinals was considered treason. One couldn't say anything bad about this team coached by Fred Thomann.

This wasn't just the Plymouth Rocks, this was "our team," and everybody was expected to get on the bandwagon and let the world know they were from Plymouth and "we're proud" of this team.

This was especially evident in the quarterfinal contest in Ferndale High where the gates opened at 6:15 p.m., an hour and 15 minutes ahead of game time. The moment the doors slowly opened, the Plymouth crowd started to pour in. None was going to get caught and left on the outside if the gym became overcrowded.

It wasn't the same story for the followers of Pontiac Central who arrived about 15 minutes before the start and only by the graciousness of the tournament management were they allowed to sit along the sidelines in front of the crowded bleachers.

It made for close quarters but didn't bother the players and did give a lot more spectators a chance to see their favorite team play.

WHAT A ROAR went through the gym when the five Plymouth 'pep club' buses arrived and dumped 300 students.

They had to sit in the bleachers at the end of the court in back of the north backboard. That didn't dampen their enthusiasm one bit.

They had hardly settled into their seats when they began to let off steam, the like of which no Plymouth cheering section ever did before.

They never let up for the entire game, even in the closing minutes when it was apparent the Rocks were going home the victors.

Salem Principal Bill Brown had a seat in the middle of the cheering section and was rooting just as loud as the students.

How bad was the basketball fever? Well, let's put it this way, there were a number of usually untraconservative residents who were whooping it up just as much as the kids. Seems like young and old came out to see the Rocks win and they weren't going to have it any other way, even if it meant they wouldn't be able to talk for a couple of days.

Pat Montagano, a former assistant coach at Plymouth and now varsity basketball coach at Livonia Churchill, was there with his wife renewing acquaintance with Plymouthites and taking time to wish Coach Thomann the best.

Mel Blunk, retired assistant superintendent of schools in charge of business, arrived early. He hasn't missed a Plymouth game for years and was one of the first in line for tickets for the semifinals.

THE PLYMOUTH cheerleaders were more colorful than ever.

They appeared with a ringlet of flowers in their hair, compliments of Bill Ruhr of Heide's Greenhouse.

The cheerleaders appeared at

Twp. considers erosion control

CANTON—Land developers and builders operating in the township may soon face stiffer regulations concerning soil erosion if the township board passes a recently introduced soil and sedimentation control ordinance.

The ordinance, introduced by the board March 11, is a response to state demands for more control over soil that is being washed away.

Explains Clerk John Flodin: "This ordinance is a result of Department of Natural Resources orders. It has informed local governments if they do not legislate soil control acts, the state or county will.

"Rather then let big brother come in and take it over we decided to draft the ordinance ourselves. If we don't the county will come in (under the Soil Erosion Control Act, Michigan Public Act 347 of 1972) and enforce its own law.

The ordinance is designed primarily to prevent topsoil from being eroded and washed away, in areas under development according to the clerk.

Adds Flodin: "This is basically aimed at land developers who come in to build a subdivision and strip the cover off the land. Winds and rain erode the land, especially in the spring, and the topsoil drains into streams and eventually into the Great Lakes."

Flodin says the ordinance is designed primarily for ecological reasons, because the residues of fertilizers drain with the soil into the streams and lakes of Michigan.

"There's some merit to it," comments the clerk, "pollution involves a lot more than chemical and industrial waste. Just walk around here in the spring and you'll see the erosion."

The ordinance has to be passed by the township board in time to submit a final draft to the State Water Resources Commission before July 1. If it fails to meet that deadline, the county will draft and enforce its own ordinance.

Humane Society contract approved

CANTON—The township board, unanimously acting on the recommendation of treasurer Carl Parsell entered into a 22-month contract with the Michigan Humane Society.

Parsell, in reviewing the books for last year discovered the township spent more than $8,000 for picking up stray dogs in the township.

According to 1974 records, 300 dogs were handled, at an average cost of $27 a dog.

Gary Frazell, executive director of the Humane Society, which has a branch in Westland, informed the board of the many services performed by the society and stated, "Our primary purpose is to assist local communities in their attempts to provide adequate and humane housing for animals at large."

Frazell added, "We have a cruelty investigator who would be at the township's disposal and we also promise not to let any animals brought in to us be used for experimentation. That is expressly prohibited by our constitution."

The terms of the society's contract with Canton are divided into two parts. Part is based on the total population of the township and part is based on the number of dogs brought into the humane society and the length of time they are housed.

For the first year of the contract, the township will pay 15 cents per person based on the 1970 census (11,000 people) or $1,650. The second year the township will pay 15 cents a person for 25,000 residents, or $3,750.

The cost of holding animals will be 90 cents per day for each. Each animal will be held for a minimum of four days.

Parsell says the township was paying betwen $3 and $4 a day for holding animals in the past. He comments, "This is definitely the most efficient way for us to deal with our stray dog problem. With spring and summer on the way the problem will get a lot worse. If we oad this last year we would have saved almost $5,000. I think it is a very good move."

SC board eyes 7-man make-up

Changing the Schoolcraft Board of Trustees composition from eight members to seven is scheduled for public discussion at the board's March 19 meeting.

The smaller membership figure was discussed March 12 by six trustees in a study session. According to John LaRue, SC board chairman, all those present were in favor of decreasing the membership.

Board members Arch Vallier and Mrs. Rosina Raymond were absent from the study session and are expected to express their viewpoints at the Wednesday meeting.

In the past, Mrs. Raymond and Trustee Barbara Blatt had opposed the seven member figure. Mrs. Raymond supported increasing the membership to nine.

Friday, LaRue stressed that no firm decision has been made and none is expected until the board meets April 23.

SHOULD the board recommend decreasing its membership, the change would not be effective at the upcoming June election.

Actually decreasing the composition must be accomplished by an act of the Legislature, revising a statute under which SC operates.

This means there will be an eight-member board for at least the next two years. With LaRue resigning from the board, two seats will be up for grabs in the June election.

At present, SC's board composition is determined by a 1971 court order requiring all eight members be elected at-large. Previously, one from each school district (Livonia, Plymouth, Clarenceville, Garden City and Northville) was elected and three were elected at-large.

The court challenge centered on whether the by-district membership violated the one man-one vote concept. The judge ruled it did.

Pressure to change to a seven-member board seems to center on changing from the court order to a legislative act as a basis of operation.

TRADITIONALLY, community college boards have seven members, and SC and Delta Community College are the only two in the state to have more.

At SC's inception in 1961 there were only seven—one each representing the Livonia, Clarenceville, Garden City and Plymouth school districts and three elected at-large. When the Northville School District joined the SC constituency in 1963, an additional representative was added, increasing the membership to eight.

Since the court decision other proposals have been made including one to draw up special equally-sized districts for the college so that there again would be a by-district board.

KARMEN M. BROWN recently joined Wayne County General Hospital in Westland as hospital administrator. She was chief occupational therapist for Sinai Hospital, Detroit, and spent four years on the occupational therapy staff of the Rehabilitation Institute of Detroit. Miss Brown received a BS degree in occupational therapy from Wayne State University and a masters in public health medical care organization from University of Michigan. Among her professional interests, she prefers planning the delivery of patients services, evaluation operations and community involvement.

Correction

In the March 6 edition of the Observer & Eccentric it was incorrectly reported that U.S. Rep. William Ford (D-Taylor) voted against repealing the oil depletion allowance.

Ford, whose district includes Westland, Garden City, Canton Township and part of Livonia, voted to repeal the allowance, a part of the federal tax law for 50 years.

Ford said he has advocated repeal of the allowance for the past 10 years and shepherded the amendment through the Democratic Caucus to bring it to a floor vote Feb. 27.

The congressman said he and the amendment's sponsor, Rep. William Green (D-Philadelphia), argued that it was most appropriate to attach the amendment to the $21.3 billion tax cut bill because it would be the most difficult for the President to veto.

3 Reps. OK tax hike bill

Western Wayne County representatives were almost evenly split in voting on the 7/10ths of one per cent state income tax hike approved by the State House of Representatives March 13.

Reps. William Keith (D-Garden City), John Markes (D-Westland) and Roy Smith (D-Ypsilanti) voted with the majority 59-42 to approve the tax measure which is expected to win approval in the Senate and the Governor's signature. If there is clear sailing, the additional tax raising the rate from 3.9 to 4.6 per cent will become effective May 1.

Keith's district includes Garden City; Markes', north Westland and southwest Livonia; and Smith's, most of Plymouth.

Opposing the increase were Reps. John Bennett (D-Redford) and Robert Geake (D-Northville), whose district includes most of Livonia.

The legislator representing southern Westland, Canton Township and part of Plymouth, Thomas Brown (D-Westland), was absent from the session while attending a funeral and did not vote.

Gov. Milliken had stressed the need for a hike in the state's income tax since the food and drug sales tax was repealed by voters in November. He said the additional tax would generate about $220 million, enough to offset the revenue lost from the drug tax.

Republicans split on the House vote with 24 opposing their party leader and 20 casting their lot with 39 Democrats. The bill passed with only three more votes than the 56 needed for approval.

Alberts to open Livonia store

Alberts, a women's apparel chain, will open its newest store Thursday, March 20, in the Wonderland Shopping Center, Livonia.

David Nakervis, a long-time assistant buyer for Alberts, is the manager of the Wonderland store.

The Wonderland store is the 54th in the Alberts chain, with others located in major regional shopping centers in Michigan, Ohio and Illinois.

Appealing to young contemporaries, the glazed yellow brick exterior of the 6,000-square-foot store gives only a hint of the chic interior. Contemporary textured copper carpet and muraled walls of deep metallic tones highlighted with copper and silver give the store its sparkle.

Besides its own charge account system, Alberts also honors BankAmericard and Master Charge accounts.

She looks at you through writing

By DARLENE STINSON

A capital "I," a crossed "t," or an open "o," are scrawled letters on a page to most persons, who decipher the scribbled handwriting of friends or fill a page with penmanship.

But to Lucille McKinney, teacher of a handwriting analysis course for the Plymouth-Canton-Northville YMCA, the written symbols are mirrors, reflecting the hidden personality.

Relaxing in her Northville home with magnifying glass in hand, Mrs. McKinney pored over a piece of handwriting this week and explained what she calls "the science of human understanding."

"For years, many people have felt handwriting analysis was fortune telling or a hoax," Mrs. McKinney said. "But it's not. We can really tell everything about a person's personality through his handwriting.

"Handwriting is a picture of a person's personality, whenever he puts a stroke on paper," she said. "When you're analyzing, you have to look at every stroke. After we look at all the strokes, we evaluate them and get a total picture of the person's personality."

Mrs. McKinney's bout with handwriting analysis started back in 1954, while she was teaching homebound students in the Wayne-Westland School District.

"I was working with children, and I thought this would help give me better understanding of my students," explained the retired school teacher. "When I'd pick up a new case with my handwriting, I could determine whether there was something happening at home that was interfering with a student's studies. This was so important to my teaching."

In 1955, Mrs. McKinney received a certificate in handwriting analysis from the Mott Foundation at Flint. She served as second president of Michigan's Grapho Analysts, Inc., in 1959, and completed a masters degree program at the Chicago International School of Handwriting Analysis in 1960.

Since then, the veteran school teacher of 33 years has taught handwriting analysis courses at Cleary College in Ypsilanti and at adult education programs in the Plymouth Community School District and the Wayne-Westland School District.

She has taught numerous courses in her own home as well as the current program, offered by the YMCA in Plymouth's East Middle School.

"We can tell a tremendous amount about a person's personality by the way he crosses his 't's, by the size of his letter's lower loops and by the size of his upper loops," Mrs. McKinney explained. "Another thing I look at is capital 'I's. They tell the self-image of an individual."

A "backhanded" slant provides clues to a selfish personality, Mrs. McKinney explained, while letters slanted to the extreme right indicate an impulsive, emotionally unstable state of mind. Vertical letters or those moderately slanted, to the right indicate a well-adjusted personality.

A wide-looped capital "I" indicate a positive self-image, she said, while an open "a" shows a talkative nature. Heavy-handed penmanship is characteristic of grudge-holding individuals.

Chamber knocks agency would take some of the load off of them.

"As for the Better Business Bureau, that's just a copout. They have no power—all they can tell a businessman is you're not a member anymore."

Supervisor Robert Greenstein agreed that the primary reason the ordinance was tabled was for further study. He echoed Myers' sentiments, "We want more input from the business community and the total community alike. We are encouraging all those interested to step forward and participate in any discussions we schedule in the future.

"HOWEVER, MY PERSONAL view is that a strong consumer protection agency is the duty of good government."

The board cannot take action on the ordinance until it is published and taken off the table at another meeting.

Comments Myers, "I hope we have a study session with all those interested this week so we can publish it and vote on it by the end of April."

Languages taught to kids by high school students

By DARLENE STINSON

Jumping from his desk at Isbister Elementary School, a third grader in Nancy Martinez' class quickly shut the classroom door last week.

"Tres bien," praised a high school French student for correctly executing her French demand. Other third graders giggled and clapped and raised their hands, in hopes of being next.

Tidbits of French, Spanish and German are seeping into three elementary schools in the Plymouth Community School District these days, as third- and fourth-year language students from the Centennial Educational Park tutor the youngsters in conversational skills.

The pilot foreign language program was started in Isbister, Allen and Gallimore elementary schools six weeks ago to give the elementary pupils a taste of foreign culture and to increase the skills of high school students.

"I think it's a good experience for children to realize that other children don't talk the way they do," explained Gallimore principal George Dodson, whose request for a foreign language program spearheaded the tutor approach.

"It's a very positive thing in the schools. The big teenagers, as they call them, come in here, and they're proud of it. It's good for the high school students too. I think the best way to learn something is to teach it."

The pilot tutor program is conducted on a voluntary basis, according to Jerry Morris, foreign language coordinator at the Centennial Educational Park.

High school students in Madeline Salonen's German class and others in Jill Silver's French class have volunteerd to tutor second and third graders at Allen and Isbister schools. Students in Kathy Huyck's Spanish classes are tutoring second graders at Gallimore during class time.

A total of 27 high school students are involved in the tutor program. None receive extra credit for the foreign language project.

But tutors and foreign language teachers as well as elementary teachers and students attest to the value of the program.

"It enriches the program tremendously" said Rosemary Alexander, whose third graders are being tutored in Spanish. "Kids are very good teachers, and it enriches them too."

Mrs. Huyck, a Spanish teacher who's enrolled in a masters degree program in cross-age tutoring at Wayne State University, jumped at the tutoring opportunity.

"It's a pilot program to see how cross-age tutoring works," Mrs. Huyck said. "I'm trying to prove in my thesis that it does.

"The little kids learn so fast," she said, "and the tutors' fluency and communication skills in the language are greatly enhanced. The tutors are doing a fantastic job.

"We're finding one of the biggest advantages in applying for jobs is having a second language," Mrs. Huyck added. "If you can learn a second language, you'll know the first one even better."

Mrs. Silver, whose French students are involved in the tutoring program, added, "By studying another language and culture, you become more tolerant of other lifestyles. Hopefully, that will be a by-product of this program."

Younger children are able to pick up a foreign language more quickly, she said.

"The older you are the more engrained your language patterns become," she explained. "It's much easier to pick up a language when you're younger. After age 12, studies have proven it's almost impossible to pick up a foreign language without an accent."

Puckering her lips to enunciate the French "u" sound for her third grade pupils, tutor Sam Keith explained her reactions to the program.

"I really like teaching these kids, because they're not self-conscious," said the 11th grader, who has journeyed to France. "Older people are often afraid to try the pronunciation.

"I think everyone should speak at least two languages," added Miss Keith, who one day hopes to teach foreign languages on a professional basis. "You can understand other cultures better."

The tutors, who visit the elementary schools once on theie six-day schedule at the Centennial Educational Park, formulate most of their lesson plans.

Teachers hope to continue the language program in future years, following elementary school children as they progress from year to year.

"The children seem quite enthusiastic," said Mrs. Salonen, a high school German teacher. "For the most part, they catch on very quickly."

Singing the French verses of "Frere Jacques" and spewing out the French names of objects on their tutors' flash cards, third graders at Isbister School displayed their enthusiasm last week.

"I like it," said third grader Chrissi Kordick. "When I get home, I can talk to my sister. She's 16, and she's taking French too."

Chrissi's classmate, Johnny Almand, likes to chatter too

"I like learning French, so I can talk to my mom," Johnny said. "She doesn't know French, but I talk anyway."

FRENCH ROOSTERS say "bonjour" to the sun, as second and third graders at Isbister Elementary School all know. The students are learning conversational French in a pilot foreign language program, under which high school students act as tutors. Concentrating on a French lesson are (from left) Isbister classroom teacher Nancy Martinez, tutor Sam Keith, a junior at the Centennial Educational Park, third grader Jill Pearse and third grader Kim Newsom. Salem sets vocal concert

PLYMOUTH—Music ranging from 17th Century Madrigals to popular songs of today fill the bill tomorrow (Tuesday) evening at 8 p.m. as the Plymouth Salem High vocal music department presents its annual spring concert.

Opening the program in the Salem auditorium will be the men's chorus with "Ecce Panis Angelorum" by Lotti. A popular medley follows including "Sunshine on My Shoulder," "If You Could Read My Mind," and "The Beat Goes On." "Stouthearted Men" closes the group's performance.

The ninth grade chorus sings a spiritual "Let Us Break Bread Together," accompanied by pianist Sandy Neu. Pianist Amy Andrews and guitarists Mary Marsh and Sandy Neu will accompany "Early Morning Rain" and the group will conclude with "This Is Your Song."

The Madrigal Singers recreate chamber music with "Matona Lovely Maiden" and "To Woodland Groves." Their usual fare is varied with the singing of "Take Me Home Country Roads."

Music of the Carpenters fills the program for the girls glee club with "Superstar," "We've Only Just Begun," "Saturday," and "Rainy Days and Monday."

Cage fever hits

their best in leading cheers and received a tremendous response when they asked for a cheer.

One would have thought the ultimate had been reached when the Rocks started out with such a "hot hand" and roared away from the Chiefs.

The noise was so great one could hardly hear and ear drums were being tested all over the gym. The south end where the Pontiac rooters sat was a bit quiet but not the north end.

Lawyer Ed Draugelis arrived a bit late and he and his companions started for seats in the Pontiac section before they suddenly realized they didn't see many familiar faces. Then they had to go all the way up to the bleachers on the second floor for seats. They would have had a better view from the Pontiac bleachers.

Orville Tungate, the last hope of the Democrats for a position in Plymouth Township, was there early with his wife and making quite a bit of noise. Tungate was busy asking where he could buy tickets for the semifinal games when he circulated around the gym at halftime.

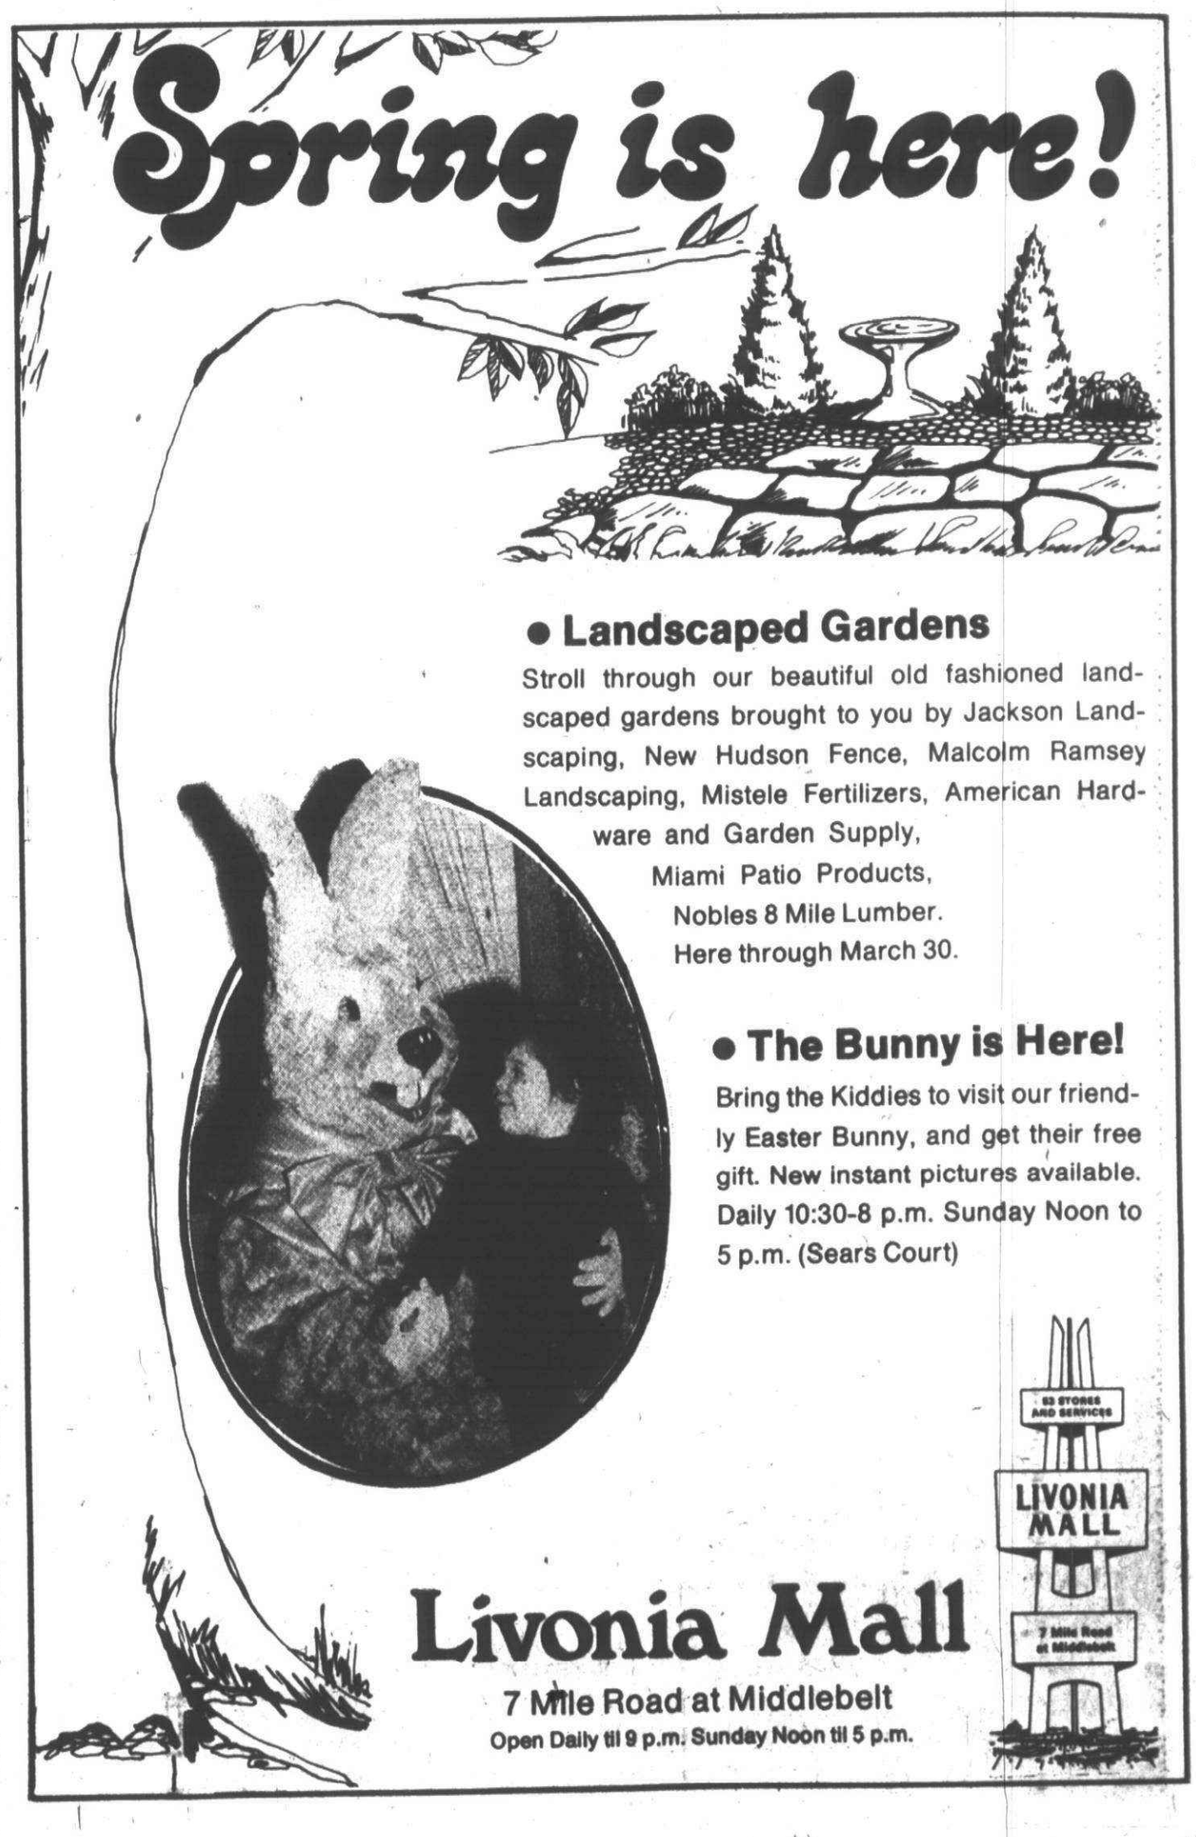

That's when most learned they would have to get in line at Salem High Friday morning and hope there were tickets left when they got to the windows.

PLYMOUTH'S Athletic Director John Sandmann had the roughest job of all. He had to tell all customers there was only one ticket available per patron because the allotment from the Michigan High School Athletic Association was only 1,250.

More than that, Sandmann had to go to Lansing to pick up the tickets and then return to Plymouth before even one ticket could go on sale.

The entire supply was exhausted in less time than it takes to mention it. But the long line of customers didn't appear to go down in that same order. Sandmann had to announce that the supply was exhausted and no more available.

But that's part of the athletic director's duties when a community is hit by "basketball fever."

THE CITY'S FIRST PUMPER, a Brockway, sometime prior to 1925. Fire Chief Fred Wagenshutz is at center in rear.

AFTER 1925 the city relied on this American LaFrance, sometimes without city manager Sid Strong sitting in the driver's seat as he is in this photo.

Synthetics pose threat to modern firefighters

(Part III)

After the hose companies were disbanded and the department consolidated there was only one fire station in the City of Plymouth until 1954. It was located in the old village hall. The doors to the station were at the front of the building facing Main Street. City Manager Al Glassford, who tried to dress up the front of the building with a few flower boxes, frequently complained that the fire truck always knocked a box off its pedestal whenever the firemen took a left turn out of the building.

When the new city hall was opened in 1964, the fire department moved into new quarters at the rear of the building. In 1954, a second fire station was built at Holbrook and Spring where the Phoenix Company once stored its hose cart. The additional station was constructed to prevent the possibility of fire engines on the way to a northside fire being delayed by a train halted at the Main Street railroad crossing.

THE FIRST exotic fire apparatus to appear in Plymouth was described to Charlie Bennett by Anson Polley, the blacksmith, whose shop stood on the site of the old village hall. Polley said the device "looked much like an old fashioned hand car that was used by railroad laborers, the kind that had handles on it.

"By pumping these handles up and down, the water could be pumped from the creek or cistern and thrown on the fire." Polley did not say how effective the device was, or when it came to Plymouth, but it was probably in the 1860s or '70s.

Another addition to the city's primitive hose carts was a hook and ladder in 1898. In the early 1900s, a chemical rig, similar to a large fire extinguisher, was purchased.

The first self-propelled fire engines employing an internal combustion motor, and especially built to carry a crew and equipment and to provide the required volume of water at proper pressure for the hose lines, came on the market in 1903. It was not until 1919, however, that Plymouth got its first motorized fire truck, a Brockway.

Today, the department is equipped with a 750-gallon per minute American LaFrance pumper, purchased in 1954, and a 1,000-gallon pumper of the same make, purchased in 1957. On order since October 1974, is a 1,500 gallon American LaFrance pumper which will replace the 1954 truck.

THE DEPARTMENT'S purchases of pumpers serve to illustrate the rate of inflation in recent years. The pumper purchased in 1954 cost $18,500. The lowest bid on the pumper now on order was $57,000. Chief Schoenneman says if the same vehicle were to be ordered today it would cost $68,000.

The fire department has been providing ambulance service to the city since it took over the function from the Schrader Funeral Home in 1969. The department's ambulance, equipped with respirators and a heart massaging machine, is staffed by firemen trained for the work. They took a year's training at the University of Michigan and at St. Joseph's Hosptial in Ann Arbor.

Greatest dollar loss by fire in the history of the Plymouth Fire Department was $4,721,013 in 1972. That included the expensive fire at the Packaging Corporation plant on Sheldon Road near the railroad tracks. Lowest loss, $435, was recorded in 1937-38.

Greatest number of calls occurred in 1966 when 666 runs were made. Fewest, only 17, was in 1934-35.

Asked about the major causes of fires, firemen usually quip: "men, women and children." The records indicate that the chief causes in Plymouth in the 1920s were dry grass and shingle roofs. By the 1940s, automobile fires were becoming frequent.

Today, George Schoenneman, fire chief since 1965, says careless smoking and children playing with matches top the list.

PLYMOUTH—PAST AND PRESENT by Sam Hudson

IN THE OLD days, when the fireman was affectionately called "Old Smokey," if he happened to inhale too much wood smoke he could assume that the effects would wear off in a day or two. Today, points out Chief Schoenneman, the fireman worries less about woodsmoke and more about the dangerous fumes caused by the burning of materials made of plastic and other synthetics.

Aside from the use of synthetics in industrial plants, the ordinary house has drapes, tiles, carpets and other furnishings made of synthetics. These not only produce noxious fumes when ignited, they burn at a faster rate than materials the fireman encountered in the past. For that reason, Schoenneman says, firemen have to rely more on breathing apparatus than was the case when he first joined the department.

Among the major alarms to which the department has responded since Schoenneman joined it 28 years ago are the fires in the Penniman Building, in the Packaging Corporation plant, in the Beauty College on Penniman Avenue, and at Jack Selle's retail Buick building.

Among the fires to which the department has responded outside of the city, Schoenneman remembers those at the GM and Ford plants in Livonia, the one at Sam Hadous' night club in Plymouth Township, and the city of Detroit riot fires in 1967.

ASKED WHETHER the Plymouth Fire Department is equipped to handle fires in highrise buildings, Schoenneman replies that it certainly is equipped to handle a fire in any building in the city today. (At present, the Mayflower Hotel, which is three stories high, is Plymouth's tallest building).

No city, Schoenneman adds, regardless of its equipment, is prepared to handle a fire in a very high building unless the building is equipped with an internal fire-fighting system, including pipes, filled with water under pressure, connected to sprinkler heads.

Asked about problems he sees for his department in the future, Schoenneman observes that population growth, usually a prime factor in increasing the number of fires, will be limited by the restricted geographic boundaries of the city. The problem of fighting vehicular fires should increase, however, as the volume of traffic in and through Plymouth increases.

Schoenneman also foresees expanding use of the department's ambulance service, and a day when the ambulance attendants will be in direct communication with hospitals as the vehicle is enroute.

State census bills receive support

PLYMOUTH TOWNSHIP—The board of trustees may no longer have to wait for years ending in zero to gather more state funds for the township, if a Michigan Senator or House bill becomes law.

Trustees last week unanimously approved a resolution in support of Senate Bill 126 and House Bill 4172 that would allow counties and municipalities to conduct censuses between federal population counts, taken once every 10 years.

The identical bills, introduced by State Rep. Thomas Brown (D-Westland) and State Sens. Carl Pursell (R-Plymouth), William Faust (D-Westland) and David Plawecki (D-Dearborn Heights), could result in increased state revenues and more liquor licenses for Plymouth Township and other municipalities that experience a boom in population between federal census years.

ALTHOUGH Plymouth Township would probably not take advantage of a mid-term census at this time, Clerk Helen Richardson said the day may come when it would.

The township's population, pegged at 17,500 in the 1970 census, has climbed to about 19,000 in the last five years, she said.

"A census has not been discussed at the board level," Mrs. Richardson said, "but we may have a big leap in population in coming years. If the growth comes here, it would be to our advantage to conduct a census."

CANTON Township, where population has more than doubled since 1970, is conducting a census of its own this spring.

But Supervisor Robert Greenstein said the census will not reap more state funds from gasoline and sales tax, unless the bills are passed.

The Canton Township Board of Trustees last week passed a similar resolution.

Under the bills, a county or municipality would bear the cost of the mid-term census.

Wayne County Commissioner Royce E. Smith urged passage of the resolution at last week's meeting of the Plymouth Township Board of Trustees.

"If this bill is passed, it will permit a mid-term census to be taken," Smith said. "Most governments in Wayne County would more than get their money back the first year. If anyone would like to write a letter to the governor to pass these bills, I'd appreciate it."

Taylor, Smith to help lure tax base here

Two area Wayne County Commissioners are members of the county's public works committee which is spearheading efforts to attract business and industry into the county.

The board of commissioners, at the recommendation of the public works committee, has allocated $35,000 to fund efforts of a blue ribbon citizens council to promote employment by attracting business and industry to the county.

Members of the public works committee includes Thomas Taylor (D-Westland), whose district includes Garden City, and Royce E. Smith (D-Belleville), whose district includes Plymouth, Plymouth Township and Canton Township.

The advisory council will consist of 15 business, labor and other community leadersappointed by Roscoe Bobo, chairman of the county board of commissioners, with board approval. Advisory council members will serve without pay.

The appropriation will be used to finance such projects as research, national advertising and promotional meetings.

Links with the past: a collector's keepsakes

By W.W.EDGAR

PLYMOUTH — Many persons take keen delight in preparing scrapbooks to maintain a link with the past. They'll page through them recalling many of the memorable events in their lives.

Dave Agnew, the veteran jeweler who once operated the smallest store in America at 340 S. Main Street, goes these folks one better. He has kept many souvenirs— old clocks, watches, pins and fountain pens— to remind him of his days in business. And he is ever willing to give you the history— and price— of these keepsakes.

He became especially interested recently when Tim Richard, news editor of the Observer & Eccentric, revealed that his wife had given him a fountain pen and that it was a reminder of the days before the ball point and how they now are in the limbo of forgotten things.

"I've got a couple of real old timers," Agnew told a friend and then played host in his "Souvenir Corner," in the basement of his home at 1200 Ross.

With great care he took the two old time Shafer pens out of their wrappings, and said, "Here is a real link with the past." They sure were. Instead of the having the metal lever on the barrel of the pen, to use while refilling, these old timers had barrel plungers that unscrewed at the end. It was a suction type and still worked well.

The real souvenir in the corner, however, is a ladies watch that is 90 years old.

"This is a grand watch," he said, "and you can see by the numbers it was manufactured in 1888 by the makers of the Elgin watches."

He is eespecially fond, too, of a watch he calls "The cricket watch." This is a gold affair, worn on the wrist, that has an alarm.

"This was used by executives to time the visitors. When the alarm sounded, the visitor was told his time was up," Agnew explained. He also displayed a large man's pocket watch that also has an alarm.

He took keen delight in showing a Gruen wrist watch with a 24-hour dial. This is a wrist watch, worn mostly by airplane pilots, who work around the clock. The numerals run from 1 to 24 and change color each 12 hours.

Sorting through these souvenirs, Agnew came upon a large watch he referred to as a "Maylan."

"This is a Swiss watch that used to be brought into the country unadjusted to save paying duty. That is, the watch was minus a balance wheel. After the watch passed customs, unadjusted, the importers would add the balance wheel."

Another choice number was a wrist watch labelled the "All-Star" watch and was a souvenir of the baseball world series with the old time New York Giants and the Yankees. Inscribed on the green face were such all star names as Mickey Mantle, Roger Maris and Willie Mays.

The real treats, however, are two watches encased in the most unusual settings. One is in a musical harp that stands only six inches high and the other is a lamp holder, modeled much after old fashioned light standards.

The harp setting is a product of the Black Forest in the Alps and "Linden" make.

The watch encased in the light bracket is an "Aurora" and, supposedly, was once the property of Daisy Air Rifle magnate Cass Hough's father.

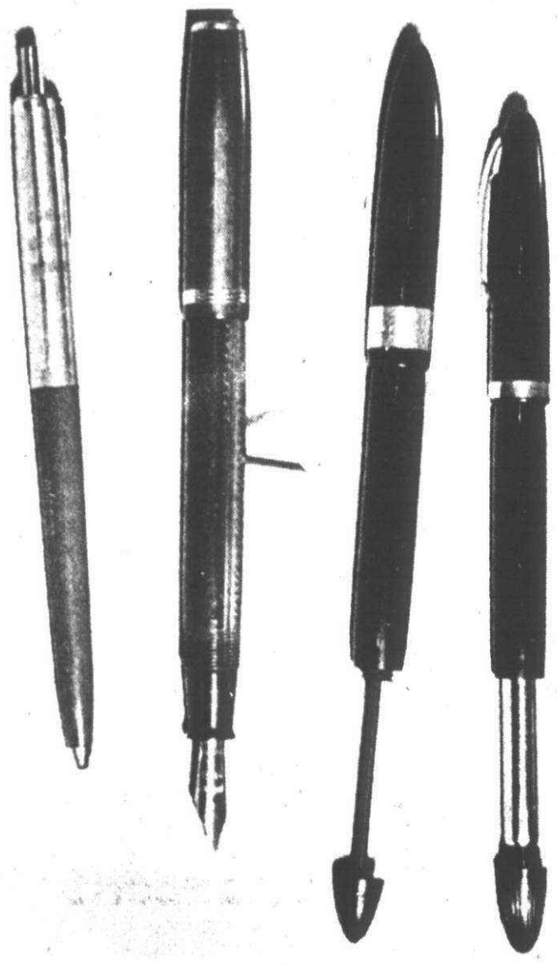

It has been two years since the veteran jeweler left his little shop to make way for the passageway from Main Street into the central parking lot.

"I was there quite a while," he says quietly, "and had some fine times. But those days are gone now— and I just spend most of the time among my souvenirs."

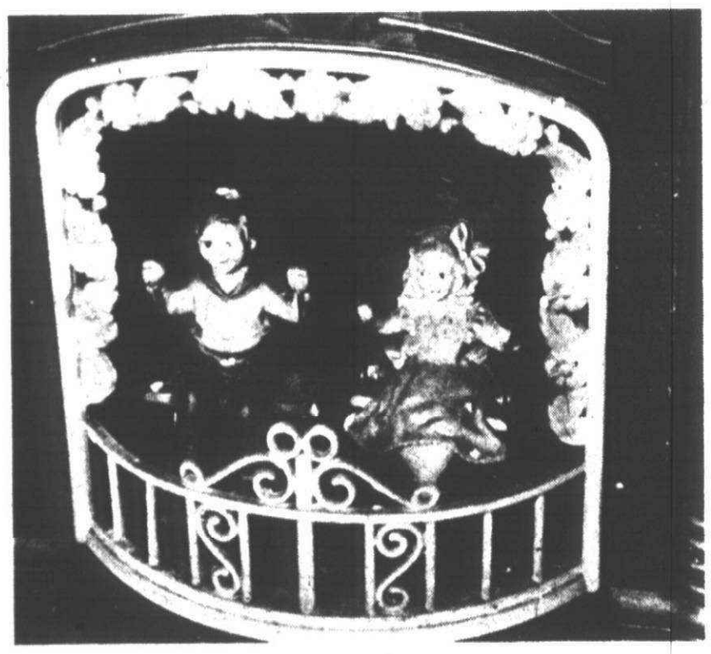

THIS AURORA in an old light standard is believed to be a watch owned by E.C. Hough, father of Daisy Manufacturing's Cass Hough.

FOUNTAIN PENS MAKE up another part of Agnew's collection, from plunger fountain pens to ball points.

THIS YOUNG COUPLE serve as pendulums on this Sessions clock, another of Agnew's favorities.

ONCE NOTED AS Plymouth's smallest store, Dave Agnew's jewelry shop is now nothing but a memory. Squeezed between the Kresge store and John Smith's menswear on Main Street, the site is now a walkway to the central parking lot.

PART OF AGNEW'S collection of interesting timepieces includes this rocking chair clock. With each rock of the grandmother in front of her fireplace, another second ticks off.

NOW RETIRED Dave Agnew still keeps in practice repairing jewelry and watches as a hobby.

MEA will not support Keith's anti-strike bill

By DENNY COFFMAN

"The Michigan Education Association will not support the Keith bill."

Keith Geiger, MEA President, made that perfectly clear at a meeting of Livonia Democrats Wednesday. Geiger said he is dissatisfied with the proposed school strike legislation that has emerged from a Special House Committee of the Michigan Legislature.

But Rep. William Keith (D-Garden City), chairperson of the committee, told the Democrats:

"We are going to have a bill one way or another. You are the ones who are going to have to live with the bill. We will pass a bill and get on to other things."

KEITH MEANT that the Legislature has other important matters to consider, such as tax reform, and that after a bill is passed, it will be up to individual school district residents to make it work.

Looming in the background of the committee's work has been the specter of regional and even statewide control of school systems, considered to be an alternative to strike-plagued local districts.

However, both Geiger and Keith stated they are reluctant to remove control from the hands of local school boards, though Keith inferred that removing local control could save the state thousands of dollars in local administrators' salaries.

"The committee has had every incentive to keep local control," said Keith.

GEIGER FOUND fault with the Keith bill on several counts, saying "the bill would discourage bargaining because the party in the best jockeying position will go for arbitration."

Geiger criticized the bill's intricacies, stating it would be a boon to lawyers who would have to clarify the bill's details.

The Keith bills—there are two of them, one reported out of the House Labor Committee, the other out of the House Education Committee—provide a timetable for mediation and arbitration.

The bills provide penalties on school boards and striking teachers; teachers would lose a day's pay for each day the strike infringes on the 180-day mandatory school year; and boards would lose a fractional portion of state aid.

The bill proposes that school run no later than the third Friday in June, strike or no strike.

ACCORDING to Keith, the bills were to "get students in school during that important fourth Friday in September, when state aid is determined on the basis of enrollment."

Keith maintains the earliest a school strike could begin would be in November. The strike would, however, be a limited one. Arbitration is not binding unless one or the other accepts an arbitration ruling based on a "last best offer."

"The bills are intended to prevent an impasse," Keith reiterated.

Geiger disagreed. "I don't believe this bill would have solved Crestwood or Garden City strikes."

He inferred that "higher ups" had been responsible for bringing an end to Detroit, Garden City and Crestwood strikes. "Labor unions leaned on both sides," said Geiger. "We all went through some tough times. I'm not saying the MEA was completely to blame, but I don't think we got off scot-free, either."

Geiger said that at a certain point in bargaining, it becomes necessary to get new negotiators for both sides, and a mediator must be free to do just that.

HE ADVOCATED allowing "state organizations" to get involved in the bargaining, presumably to bring pressure on both sides in a strike situation.

"My biggest complaint about the Keith bills is that teachers (during a strike would) lose their salaries," Geiger said.

When asked about an MEA strike fund, he claimed teachers had lost $1,000-3,000 in salaries, but the strike fund paid out only $200-300.

Geiger predicted: "I think we'll be in a regional bargaining situation in five or 10 years. I'd be willing to bargain for all of Wayne County, and I think we're going to get there."

Geiger's forecasts of regional bargaining were in direct contradiction to the statements of Keith, who said the Legislature is attempting to keep school contract negotiations in local hands.

"You would have to have," said Keith, "56 House and 20 Senate votes for regional bargaining. You'd never make it."

Keith was more optimistic about the passage of his bills, however.

Geiger said the MEA is readying its own bill. "We have people who have agreed to submit it on the Senate side. It would work better than the Keith bill."

The MEA bill would allow the courts to end school disputes and provide for more intensive bargaining, according to Geiger. He contended if such a bill had existed, "the Garden City and Crestwood disputes would have ended after the first of two strikes last year.

Geiger claimed he made the decision to call off an area wide strike by the MEA during the Crestwood confrontation.

THE CRESTWOOD and Garden City strikes were among the most bitter of local teacher disputes, with hard feelings lingering in Garden City and Crestwood parents still trying to oust Crestwood teachers who have returned to their classrooms.

The Garden City district has a contract, but the Crestwood matter is in the hands of the Michigan Supreme Court.

Geiger formerly headed the Livonia Education Association; Keith is a former member of the Garden City Board of Education. But both agreed on one point.

"We have to avoid a prolonged strike, where both sides get hardened," said Geiger.

"We must prevent an impasse," said Keith. "The state of Michigan will not tolerate another two years of strikes as we have just gone through."

Try 'creative dieting' with bean soup gratinee

By LORAINE McCLISH

Soybeans was the topic of the day for chef Franco Palumbo who visited Weight Watchers in Southfield recently, telling dieters "to be creative."

The executive chef of the international corporation served his audience a meal he described as "a deflation lunch—one that deflates the body while at the same time deflating the cost."

His own creativeness concocted "bean soup gratinee" using soybeans which can be purchased for 75 cents in a two-pound bag and the balance of the ingredients rounding out to 32 cents a serving. The soup was complemented with a salad and dessert.

Weight Watchers are renowned for sharing recipes members have created to get away from what Palumbo called the "diet food syndrome."

Diet foods are the cottage cheese-lettuce-canned peaches go-around which lacks variety and "pretty much suits the lazy fatties who are too bored with it all to start using herbs to spice things up a bit."

He advocates the "people foods" which are on-hand, easily accessible items mixed with a little creativeness because he does not believe the dieter should have to go to a lot of expense to lose weight.

In his test kitchen, Palumbo works to create recipes of food native to about 12 foreign countries where there are Weight Watcher branches, and about as many locales in the United States.

Palumbo is known as "the chef who lost his pot."

"I was one of you," he tells his audience. "There was a time when the only thing I had in my wardrobe that fit was my beads. I'd go to New York, see something I'd like and then find out there was nothing near it in a size 50 and 44 waist."

Palumbo has been dieting off and on since he was 10. In high school he was referred to as his football team's "double-tackle" and for years raced by store windows so that he wouldn't have to see his reflection in the glass. He had qualms about looking into full-length mirrors.

Since his introduction to Weight Watchers he estimates he has developed more than 1,000 recipes cooking up "a nutritious storm rather than a food orgy."

He says, "I always had confidence as a professional, but now I have confidence as a person."

Today, if the chef gets a yen for food he's constantly reminded of the "fat Frankie Palumbo."

Perched on his refrigerator, in full view, is a blow up of him at 265 pounds.

Weighing in these days at 195, he says, "I take one look and the refrigerator becomes much less important. I never want to forget."

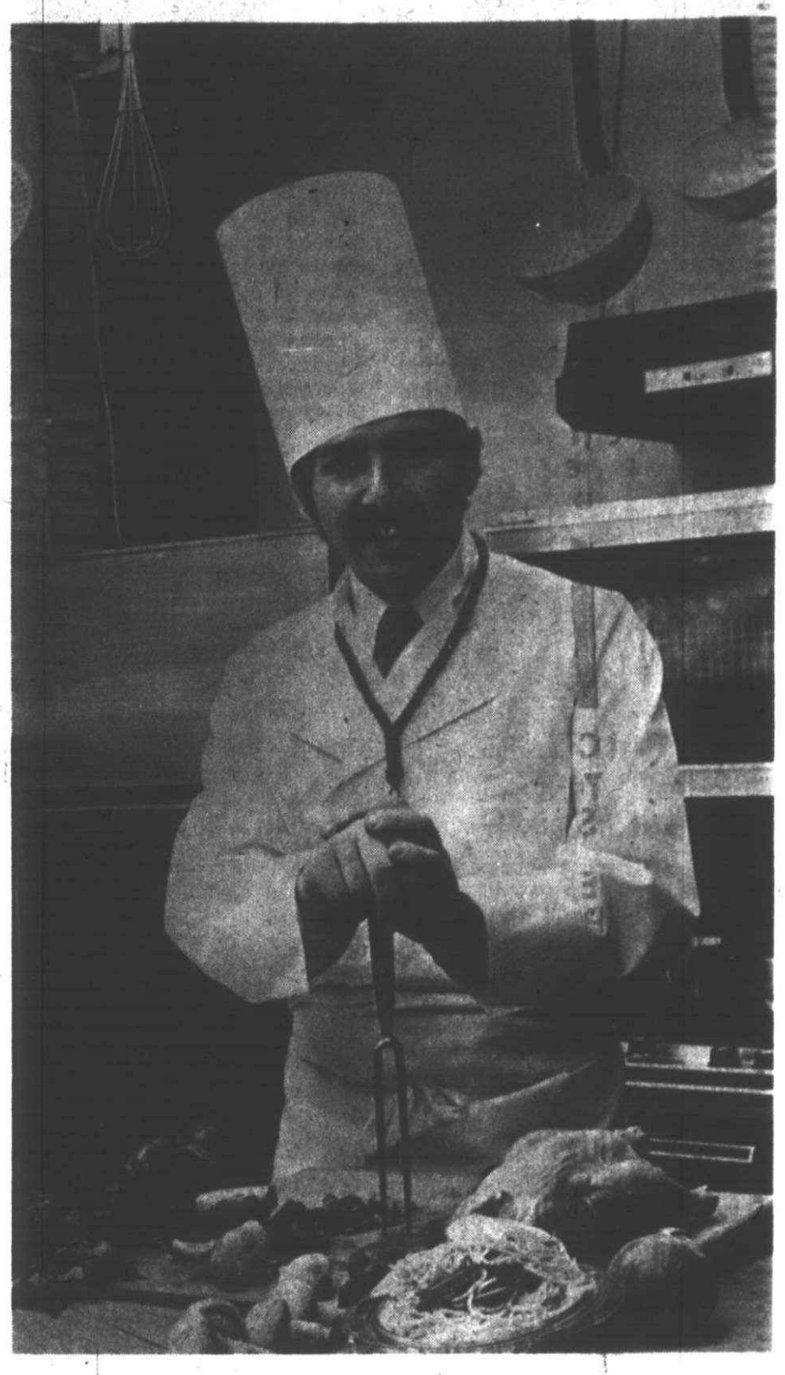

Palumbo passes on his recipe for bean soup gratinee made with the high protein soybean:

BEAN SOUP GRATINEE

3 packets instant beef broth and seasoning mix
3 packets instant chicken broth and seasoning mix
4 ounces finely chopped onion
4 ounces finely chopped carrots
1 cup finely chopped celery
2 large cloves garlic, minced
3 medium canned tomatoes, chopped
1 bay leaf
4 whole peppercorns
⅛ teaspoon dried leaf thyme
6-8 cups water
12 ounces cooked dried soybeans
4 ounces grated Swiss cheese

In large non-stick skillet, sprinkle beef and chicken broth mixes over onions, carrots, celery and garlic; cook until vegetables are tender. Add remaining ingredients except cheese. Simmer, covered, 1-½ hours or until soybeans are very soft.

Puree ¾ of soup mixture in blender; add to remaining soup. Evenly divide soup into four heatproof soup bowls. Sprinkle each with 1 ounce of grated cheese. Place in broiler; heat until cheese metls. Serve immediately. Makes 4 servings.

Bocci ball a favorite sport on island of Malta

By DUGLASS DUGLASS

My dad is a friendly sort of chap. He lives in Malta where he spends his leisure time in a cafe called the Premiere playing bocci.

This is a sport similar to horseshoes but played with a 25-pound lead ball. Bocci seems to entertain the Maltese when there is no soccer game being played in Valetta.

Perhaps you will visit the rock-sculptured limestone island, encompassed by a sea treasure of aqua jade water, continuously pampered by a soft Mediterranean breeze while basking in the sunlit skies.

Knock on any door and ask for Harry Grech, a native islander, who will probably talk about the Maltese Cross, the Maltese dog, the famous Maltese lace, Kipling's short story about the Maltese cat and Dashiell Hammett's Maltese Falcon.

IF YOU'RE lucky, he may even suggest a malted milk. That's the American in the ol' boy. That's my dad.

An indelicate sobriquet of Malta's is the Navel of the Mediterranean, because it is at the center of the sea. Caves, tunnels and galleries riddle the island of shallow soil.

Farmers still use wooden plows to score the scanty earth. Taxi boats, called "dghajsas," sway the waves of the blue lagoon at Kemmuna, while bathers bask in the ancient fortress.

Myth says that Malta was the northwest corner of the lost continent of Atlantis and that the three infernal rivers, Styx, Phleyeton and Acheron, all emptied there.

Calypso's cave was there on the smaller island, Gozo, not far away, where Ulysses spent seven years in slavery.

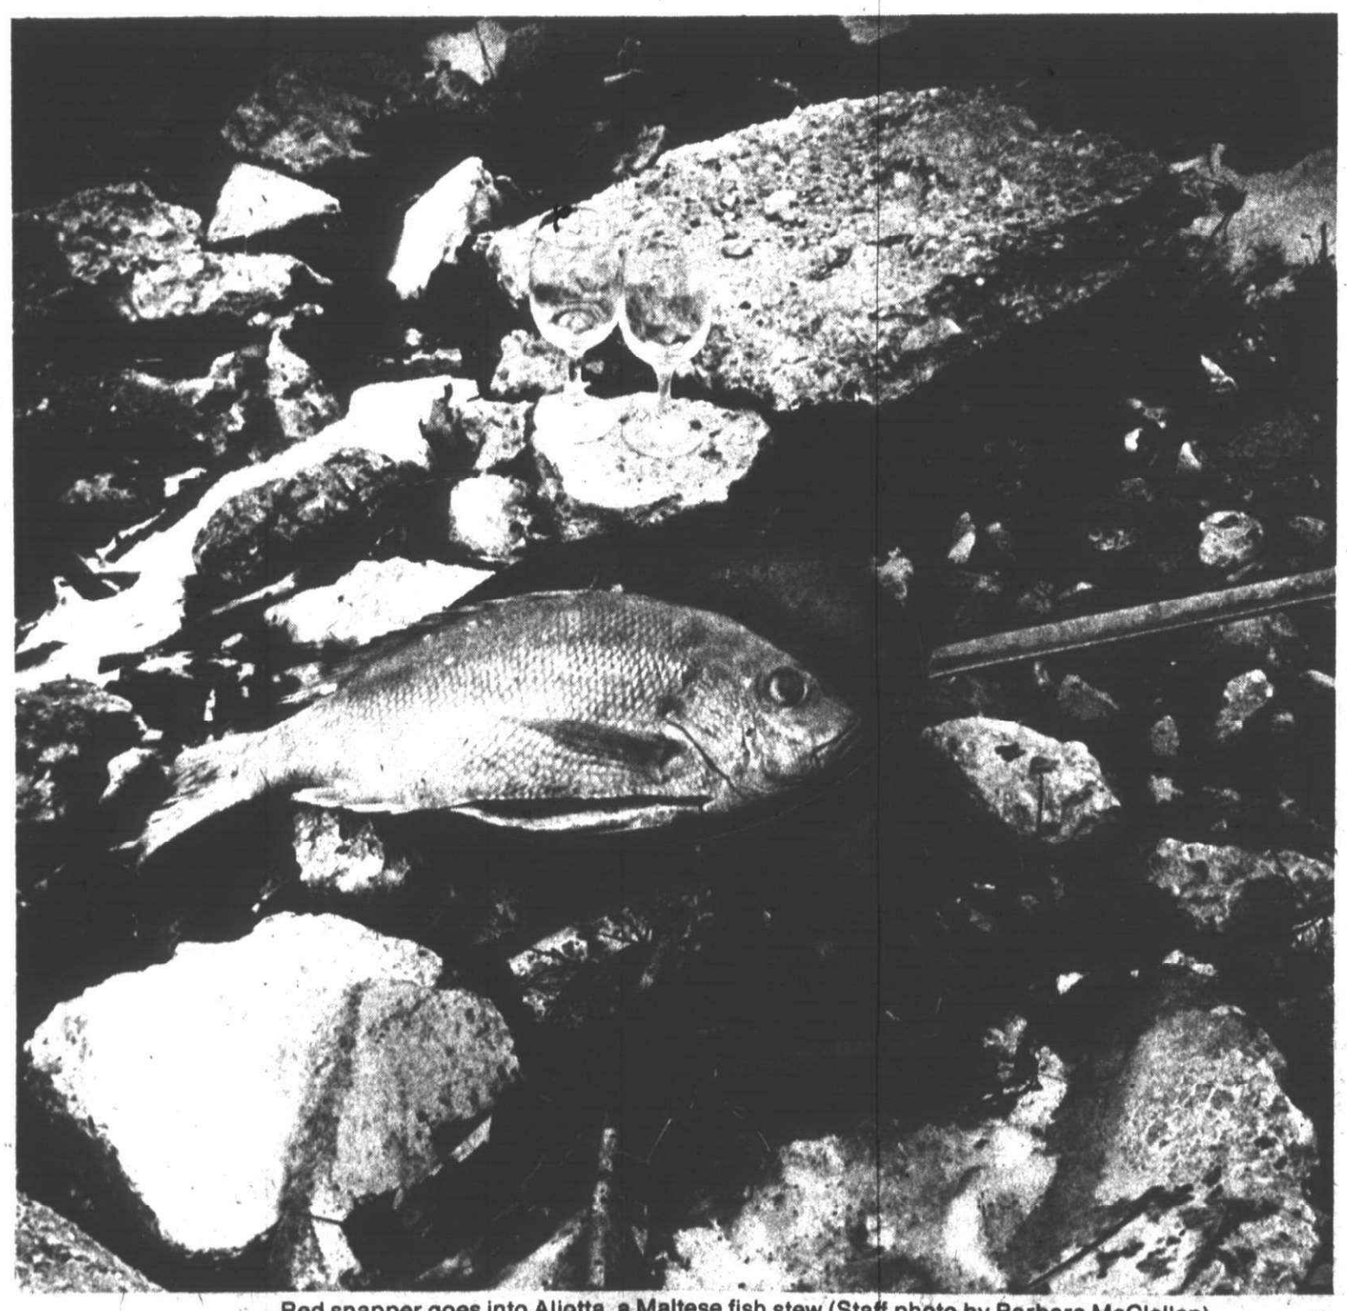

The national drink is dark beer, and its best accompaniment is a well-devoured dish, Aljotta, a vegetable broth flavored with red snapper and served with crisp sourdough bread. This recipe comes from Emma Lombardo, an American Maltese in Southfield.

ALJOTTA
(Maltese Fish Stew)

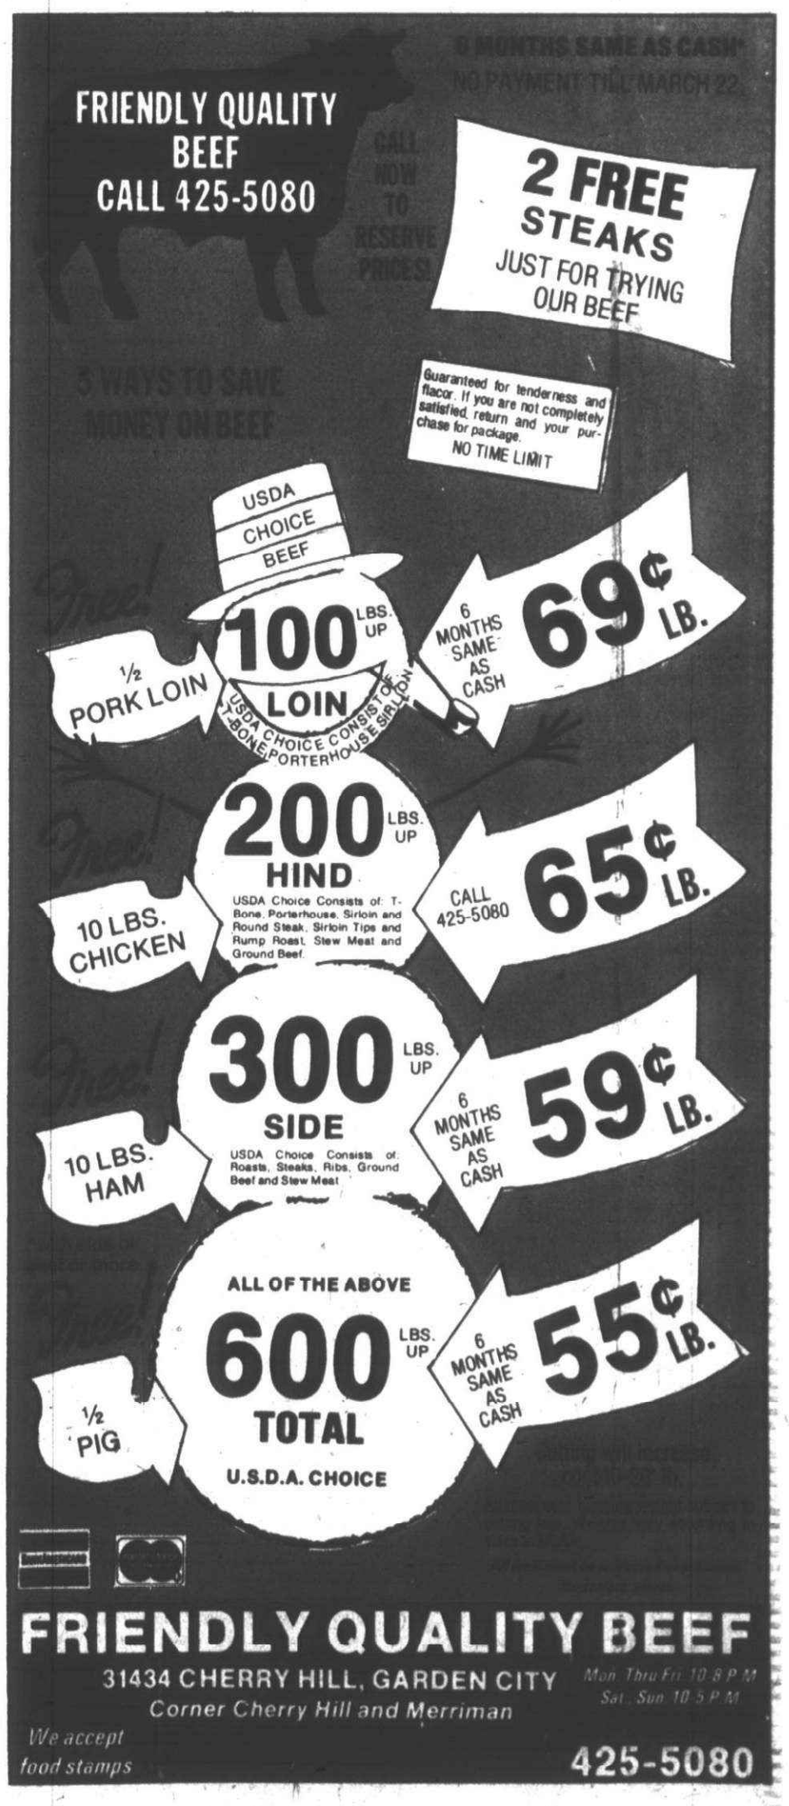

1 large onion chopped finely
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 large potato, peeled and cubed
4-6 medium tomatoes diced
1½ quarts water or fish broth
1 teaspoon chopped parsley (fresh)
10 fresh mint leaves or 1 tablespoon dried mint
2 pounds whole red snapper
Salt and pepper
1 cup dark beer
1 clove garlic

In a saute pot, add the olive oil, heat, then add the onions and potatoes. Saute until slightly golden. Add the garlic and mint, combine beer, water and fresh parsley, simmer for about 15 minutes.

Add the red snapper (fresh) to the broth, salt and pepper and simmer for 30 minutes. Serve with lemon and croutons, garnished around the fish, and fillet it at the table. Pour aromatic broth and vegetables over the fish.

Consumer agency plan needs no changes

Considerable interest and doubt have been generated in Canton concerning the recently proposed consumer protection agency ordinance.

Canton Chamber of Commerce President Bart Berg, representing the business community, has written of his "grave concern" over such an agency, and indicated that a consumer agency in Canton would be a duplication of services already available to residents.

We think not, and we applaud the administration, in particular Trustee Robert Myers, for efforts to institute such an agency.

THE ORDINANCE Myers has proposed is a strong and well thought out document. It provides for a redress of grievances for consumers who may be "ripped off" or frustrated in their attempts to deal with the business community.

The proposed ordinance provides for an agency that will have the power to license and revoke licenses for all merchants in the township, big and small alike.

This alone gives it the ability to be a viable watchdog.

The power it could wield is evidenced by the Chamber of Commerce's concern. It would spend little time notifying the board of concern over a watered down and impotent ordinance. This fear signifies the true potential of the agency.

THIS IS NOT TO SAY we cannot understand Berg's concern. An overzealous agency could wreak havoc on the commercial growth of the township and destroy any potential expansion of the tax base.

But the agency is a tool, and as such, it can be used or abused.

We are not pointing a finger at the business community. As of now, we are not aware of any merchants in Canton who are actively engaged in fraudulent business practices. We would hope that if the agency is ratified it would not only remain non-political, but unbiased in its investigation of consumer complaints.

Fear of agency abuse or apparent lack of dishonest merchants does not mean that an agency is not necessary. Like preventive medicine, a consumer agency could halt any business ills in their incipiency.

A CONSUMER AGENCY solely for Canton would not be a duplication of services. We don't fault the Better Business Bureau, but we must agree with Trustee Myers—it lacks the punch to be effective in consumer problems.

Wayne County does have a similar agency already in operation, but it is overburdened. Representatives have said so repeatedly. Furthermore, they have indicated a complete support of and a willingness to work with a "Canton only" agency.

We see no reason why a township, solely because it is a township, should not exercise its licensing privileges as cities do. The licensing power serves notice to potentially shady entrepeneurs they will not be able to operate in Canton.

WE HOPE the ordinance is passed by the board as currently constructed. An emasculated version providing for a consumer protection agency with no punch at all is not only a waste of time, but an embarassment as well.

This is a chance for the Township of Canton to be a pioneer in the State of Michigan. A strong consumer ordinance could be a prototype for other communities in the future.

We must agree with Supervisor Robert Greenstein, "It is the duty of good government to provide protection for the people"— not only in the areas of fire safety and law enforcement, but in the field of consumerism as well.

The Stroller

Unforgettable moments

By W. W. EDGAR

When a fellow strolls along the journalistic highways for more than half a century, hob-nobbing with the kings and queens of sport, meeting and chatting with the civic, industrial and political leaders he's bound to experience many unforgettable moments.

Which of these was the most exciting?

Which was the greatest thrill, the oddest or the most amusing?

These questions were put to The Stroller the other afternoon during a coffee break by one of the newer members of the staff who was fascinated by the fact that a fellow could enjoy such experiences over so long a time.

Ordinarily, these questions may have stumped some persons, or they might have been hard pressed to make their selections. But this is not the case with The Stroller.

The most exciting moment?

It came on a June night in 1938 in Yankee Stadium in New York when JOE Louis, whom The Stroller had discovered and helped coming up through the ranks, knocked out Max Schmeling in the first round.

THIS WAS EXCITING for the simple reason that Joe, now wearing the heavyweight crown, was pitted against the only fighter who ever stopped him.

For days before the fight Joe was advised to change his style a bit and carry the fight to his German rival from the first bell.

"The fight ain't going to last long," his old trainer told him, "and it might as well be him on the floor."

And that's what happened. Joe raced at Schmeling with the most ferocious attack he had ever shown and the fight lasted only two minutes and four seconds. But they were two minutes filled with excitement that never can be forgotten.

The most thrilling?

The Stroller didn't have to ponder long over that question.

It occurred one September morning in 1933 on the banks of the St. Clair River at Algonac, shortly after Gar Wood set a new world speedboat record of 124.85 miles an hour with the famed Miss America X.

Anxious to learn what emotions Gar experienced knowing that he was traveling faster than any man ever had traveled on water, The Stroller cornered him in the boathouse and sought his reaction.

"YOU THINK THAT would make a good story?" Gar said. "Okay, you'll go with us for a ride. Then, whatever your emotions are, they'll be the same as mine."

So off we went. The Stroller is deathly afraid of water and can't swim a stroke. But here was a chance for excitement and it came early.

Watching the tachometer that was marked at 3,300 revolutions per minute, to signal a new record, The Stroller got the thrill of his life, knowing that he was only the sixth man in the world ever to travel that fast on water. Talk about a thrill- nothing ever will match that one.

Sense And Nonsense

No one likes a long meeting and at this point we're sure that no one would agree more than Plymouth School Board Trustee George Lawton.

Discussing access roads for 1½ hours followed by more than an hour of discussion on high school hockey placed the board in a position of considering more than a handful of items well past the 11th hour at the March 10 meeting.

When discussion began on the possibility of an airport being placed in the district, Lawton spoke against the board taking a position on the topic and made a motion to that effect.

Several minutes later, and probably close to 18 hours after Lawton had first rubbed the sleep from his eyes, Lawton voted no for his own motion in a roll call vote.

The motion failed 4-3 and the alternative motion subsequently passed on a voice vote, with Lawton voting no again.

Hardly an issue to lose sleep over, no one really raised the question of whether the second motion really passed. They were probably too tired to care.

Supports Schwall

Editor:

The censure of Brian Schwall by the so called "Greenstein Gang" is an act I find difficult to forget. It appears that members of the Greenstein slate must develop personal security and loyalty to the deeds of Supervisor Greenstein.

Only those trustees on the Greenstein slate voted against Schwall. It also appears that a clique is in the making, and that the serious objections to the supervisor will justify censure.

No member of the Canton Board of Trustees must represent any faction, but instead they must represent the total community as Brian Schwall has always done for Canton Township.

How can supervisor Greenstein justify the hiring of Mr. Phillips with CETA funds when Mrs. Phillips is already on the payroll? Given enough time, a man with no family income could most certainly have been found to benefit from these CETA funds. I think most township residents feel taken in by this blatant act of "cronyism."

How many people remember that Brian Schwall was asked to run on the Greenstein slate but refused and then outpolled all candidates in the November election, including supervisor Greenstein?

It is not too late for the Canton Board of Trustees to rescind the censure of Brian Schwall!

I stand in agreement with Michael R. Baranowski's letter to the editor, (March 10) "to support Brian Schwall's attempt to maintain some degree of balance on (an obviously) 'slate weighted' township board."

Women's jobs are needed for prosperity, writer says

By MARGARET MILLER

Working women played a major role in bring this country its affluence, says feminist writer Elizabeth Janeway, and it would be disastrous to push them out in bad times.

"Women in the labor force in the last 25 years made those years the most prosperous in this nation's history," she stated during a visit Friday to the campus of the University of Michigan-Dearborn.

"That second paycheck in so many families—at this point about half of the married women in the country are wage-earners—has been the underpinning of an affluent society."

"So the idea that in bad times women should be pushed out to make room for more men in the work force is a counter-productive and unrealistic way of dealing with the situation."

To move in that direction, she said, would "intensify any depression we might have."

"Better make that recession," added the wife of economist Elliot Janeway with a grin. "My husband says depression, but even he uses the term 'avoidable depression.'"

IN HER CAMPUS VISIT, part of a lecture tour, Ms. Janeway gave a talk on the topic "Men and Women: Changing Roles in a Changing World," was guest of honor at a luncheon marking the first anniversary of the founding of the UM-Dearborn Commission for Women, visited several classrooms for impromptu student seminars and met the press in a special conference.

At each stop she had ready information about the status of women today, plenty of ideas as to how their lot, and that of society in general, could be advanced and facts on hand to field an assortment of questions.

In addition to discussion of working women, she covered various aspects of the Equal Rights Amendment, made a strong pitch for establishment of child care centers and fielded some sharp questions from young men students.

EMPLOYMENT FIGURES SHOW, Ms. Janeway said, that women who worked during World War II stayed home for awhile after it was over but now are back in the work force.

"Now, for every married woman who gives her full time to being a wife and mother and homemaker, there is another who also holds a paid job," she stated.

"Of the women in the work force," 42 per cent are single, divorced or widowed, and another 19 per cent are married to men who earn less than $7,000 a year."

"That means more than 60 per cent of women wage-earners are effectively heads of households.

"If you are going to hire heads of households and keep them on the payroll, you have to hire women."

THE EQUAL RIGHTS Amendment, she predicted, "will go through, because it's where we are now— it will get rid of hampering legislations." For several arguments against it, she had fast rebuttals.

With regard to drafting women for military service, she said she thought it most unlikely unless their services really were needed.

"But I was told once that in 1945, before the war in Europe was over and this country also was planning an invasion of Japan, there was legislation ready to go for the drafting of nurses, because there were not enough in the armed services.

"No one seemed to think then there was anything in the constitution that said this could not be done."

Ms. Janeway also said armed services policies now discriminate against women because a woman wishing to enlist faces higher standards than her male counterpart.

"For working class young people service in the military is a good way to learn a trade, but it's made more difficult for a woman."

A YOUNG MAN in one of the classrooms commented that during his Navy service there was considerable resentment against women in the service "because they got all the shore desk jobs and we got pushed into the work on ships and overseas."

He added that he was sure you couldn't have women seamen "because men are more stable and then the women have their little problem every month."

"You believe this because it's what you've been told all your life, and I'm sure the Navy never tried to make you think differently," Ms. Janeway came back.

"But none of it happens to be true. I'm sure many of the women on shore duty would have been glad to go to sea and there is no physical reason why they should not.

"We know women have greater stamina—that's why more girl babies are born. And did you know that there is a greater change every day in the level of hormones in a man's blood than there is during a woman's monthly cycle?"

PROTECTIVE LAWS regarding heavy physical labor should be extended to men workers rather than being used as a reason for keeping women out of certain jobs, Ms. Janeway stated.

She explained what she meant when a woman in one of the classes told her that her husband and other men at his plant were resentful because they had to do, for a recently-hired woman, a heavy lifting chore that was part of the job.

"I can understand that," the speaker replied. "I think they should push for having a machine take over that kind of lifting. Machines now can— and should— take over most of our heaviest work."

The matter of public restrooms for both men and women has posed no problem on airliners, she said, and in cases where a woman does make more money than the husband she is divorcing, alimony already is being paid.

MS. JANEWAY at several points in her visit came back to the need for "good, enriching child care centers."

"Anthropological studies have shown there is no society but ours in which young children are solely in their mother's care 90 per cent of the time.

"Our society says to women 'Children are your job; whatever else you do, they are still your job.'

"Other societies have a more communal arrangement, and our's used to do this at the time of the family farms. Good child care centers— maybe we should call them nursery schools— besides enabling mothers to stay in the work force and thus improve their chance for equal pay for equal work, would be good experiences for young children."

Another change she said she would like to see made would be relaxing of the idea that paid work must be in an eight-hour day.

"Some professional couples I know have worked out good arrangements to share work and child care. And small businesses are beginning to learn they can hire two people to do one regular job, with each working part-time.

"If small businesses can do this, why not the big corporations?"

ANSWERING THE QUESTION of a male student, Ms. Janeway agreed that the women's liberation movement probably has had some influence in raising the divorce rate recently.

"As more women realize they have something better to do in life than just grab a man, some bad marriages are going to break up.

"But I think we are in a transition period, and as the movement goes on women will value themselves more and marriages will be made more sensibly and with more maturity.

"Then I think the result of the movement will be to stabilize marriage."

ELIZABETH JANEWAY is author of two major works on the feminist movement. The most recent, "Between Myth and Morning: Women Awakening," is a collection of essays and speeeches dealing with varied sexism topics.

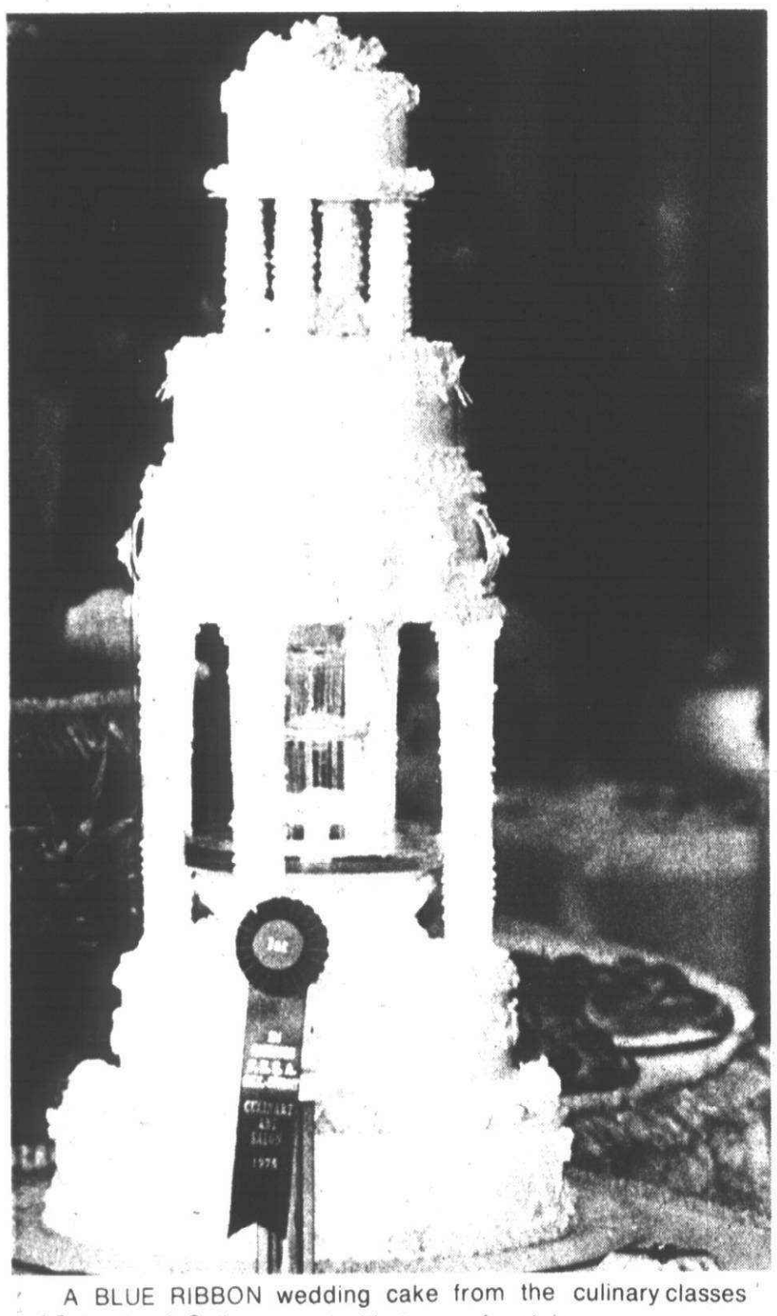

Earlier she wrote "Man's World—Woman's Place: A study in Social Mythology."

She is a trustee of Barnard College and a fellow of Yale University's Berkeley College, and she and her husband were named last year among the 25 "most influential couples" listed by the Ladies Home Journal. They have two sons, one a managing editor and the other an economist and writer.

Ms. Janeway also has authored several children's books and novels including "The Walsh Girls," "Daisy Kenyon," "Accident" and "The Third Choice."

A BLUE RIBBON wedding cake from the culinary classes of Schoolcraft College came with its own fountain.

Schoolcraft chefs take bows in area show

If the culinary arts students at Schoolcraft College stand tall beside the oven these days, they have reason.

Their beautifully turned-out wedding buffet table won best-of-show at the second annual Culinary Arts Salon at Oakland Community College's Orchard Ridge Campus.

The local entry was displayed with 17 others from area vocational high schools and colleges, all of whom vied for trophies, cash prizes and ribbons awarded by a panel of three judges.

Adrian Devogel of the Dearborn Inn, Rene Mouttet of Michigan Inn, and Rolf Neitzel, J.L. Hudson pastry chef, selected winners on the basis of practicality, craftsmanship and showmanship.

SCHOOLCRAFT'S buffet covered two long tables flanking a circular one in the center of the large room and immediately became the focal point of the colorful salon.

High above the display which included everything from hors d'oeuvres to desserts was a tall, tallow steeple centerpiece. Salt carvings at the base were further evidence of the centerpiece versatility of the local students.

But even these couldn't rival the edibles for showmanship. Turkeys and fish in mousse and aspic, an assortment of breads in artful shapes and a grand finale of cakes were artistic gems in their own right.

THE WEDDING cake with a fountain in the center was the star of a dazzling show of pastry art, certain to rival the wedding party itself in color, and lacy effects.

Because the salon drew so much public interest and student participation—more than even Larry O'Keefe of the OCC culinary arts department anticipated—it may be held in a more central location next year so more metropolitan area persons may participate. The salon is a joint project of the Food Service Executives Association and the college.

Not only does it encourage student culinary talent, and provide a heady taste of competition, it establishes the participants as artists whose works have both eye and taste appeal.

Birthright film date changed

The date for a showing of a film, "The First Days of Life," by Birthright-Pregnancy Aid, has been changed from March 19 to March 26.

The showing is scheduled at 8:15 p.m. in the Dearborn Heights Community Center, Beech-Daly south of Ford, and Dr. Richard V. Jaynes, obstetrician and gynecologist and pro-life leader, will speak.

Birthright-Pregnancy Aid is a volunteer organization designed to aid women with problem pregnancies. It is located at 2240 Middle Belt, Garden City.

Dancers visit City Women's Club

MOVING THROUGH THE STEPS of a Japanese dance are five girls who will perform March 20 for the Livonia City Woman's Club. In front is Lynn Sunamoto. Around her from left are Alysa Watanabe, Linda Ushiro, Kari Watanabe and Patti Sunamoto. The girls were trained in their dancing by Mrs. Lorraine Sunamoto. Their performance at 2 p.m. will follow a noon social and business meeting in St. Paul Presbyterian Church, Five Mile west of Inkster. (Staff photo by Art Emanuel).

Childproof bottles prevent poisonings

"Child-resistant containers have contributed to a reduction of accidental aspirin poisonings by 75 per cent in the last few years," said a representative of the Michigan Pharmaceutical Association at the beginning of Poison Prevention Week, March 16-22.

Louis Sesti, executive director of the organization added that "it was the pharmacy profession which initiated the concept of poison prevention week."

Child-resistant containers have been renuired for all forms of human prescription drugs since April 16, 1974. The U.S. Consumer Product Safetr Commission is responsible for enforcing child-resistant packaging regulations.

Sesti explained that there had been some public criticism of these containers.

"It is important for patients to know how they can obtain their prescription medications without safety closure, if they so desire," he said.

"They can do so by requesting a conventional prescription when they present their new prescription or prescription refill to the pharmacist. In most of these cases, the pharmacist will request they sign the back of the prescription or a special release form."

Technical researchers are seeking to develop satisfactory two-way closures. Until such are perfected, MPA emphasizes that the patient option for a conventional container versus a safety closure should be exercised only after due consideration.

It might be best to tolerate the inconvenience of a safety closure in those homes where there are small children, such as a grandmother's house.

The exception, on the other hand, may be very useful for elderly and arthritic patients.

Whether prescriptions have a safety closure or not, pharmacists urge everyone to store medication in the home out of the reach of children. Preferably it should be placed in a safety medicine chest or a locked closet.

Delegates to be selected

Five delegates to the October national convention of Girl Scouts of the U.S.A. in Washington, D.C. will be chosen at the annual meeting of the Huron Valley Girl Scout Council Wednesday, March 19 from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

The event will take place in the First Methodist Church, North Territorial west of Sheldon, Plymouth.

To be voting will be 101 adult delegates and 20 girl delegates from Washtenaw, Livingston, western Wayne and northern Monroe counties.

Lunch will be prepared by Senior Scout Troop 501 of Plymouth. Reservations for the luncheon are required and can be made by contacting the council office, 19 N. Hamilton, Ypsilanti.

NOW to hear talk on careers

Harriet Alpern will speak on an employment agency that specializes 18 placing women in careers that are not female oriented, at a meeting of the Northwest Wayne County Chapter of the National Organization for Women Tuesday, March 18.

The 7 p.m. meeting will be held in Newman House on the Schoolcraft College campus, 17300 Haggerty, Livonia.

Sylvia Vukmirovich will discuss new fields for women in education.

Cancer society plans meeting

"Make Today Count," a program sponsored by the Wayne County Unit of the American Cancer Society will be the feature of a meeting Wednesday, March 19 at 7:30 p.m. in Westminster Church, 17567 Hubbell (at Outer Dr.), Detroit.

This program attempts to bring together cancer patients and their families in informal meetings to discuss their mutual problems in a positive manner.

Professional resource persons will be present to answer questions. Any cancer patients, family members or friends are welcome to attend.

For further information contact the Wayne County Unit of the American Cancer Society, Detroit.

DAR to honor Plymouth girl

Ann O'Reilly, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John O'Reilly of Plymouth will be honored March 19, by the Sarah Ann Cochrane Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

A student at Our Lady of Good Counsel Catholic School, she placed third — in an essay contest the chapter sponsored.

Her topic was "Deborah Sampson, American Patriot," a young woman who served with the revolutionary army disguised as a man.

Ninety essays were entered in the contest which was open to all fifth through eighth grade students in Northville, Novi and Plymouth.

Ann, along with other winners and their mothers, will be honored by the chapter at a luncheon at 12 noon in King's Mill Club House, Northville.

Each winner will receive a certificate and a monetary award, and will read his or her essay.

Mrs. Hugh Lafferty is luncheon hostess, and will be assisted by Mrs. Elizabeth Etz, Mrs. John Armstrong and Mrs. Warren Bain.

In The Pocket

By W.W. EDGAR

Three persons whose names have been synonymous with bowling during the past quarter century will be inducted into the Detroit Bowling Hall of Fame at the annual ceremonies at Cobo Hall on April 18.

Heading the list is Ethel Hanna, who has been a competitor in the all-star leagues for more than two decades and who now is a clerk in the office of the Detroit Woman's Bowling Association.

With her will be Paul Cito, long recognized as one of the leading bowling instructors in the country. For years he was a mainstay at Ritter's Recreation and later had his own place that was a mecca for the newcomers.

The posthumous award is going to Herbert (Herb) Case, former secretary of the Greater Detroit Bowling Association, who died in retirement in Arizona several years ago.

Herb was a member of the all-star leagues for years and at one time was the champion of the Old Timers Association.

The ceremonies this year will differ from those in the past in that the induction and banquet will be held at the same location. In other years the induction was held at the Detroit Historical Museum with the dinner at a downtown hotel. This year the entire program will be in Cobo Hall.

The Hall of Fame, with the time honored plaques, had been in the Museum since its inception in 1957.

ONE OF THE BEST battles of the year was staged at Wonderland Lanes last Tuesday night when the veteran Dick Preston and Fred McClain, a youthful rival, fought it out for first place in the averages-- and youth was served.

Matching almost pin for pin during the first two games, Fred finished with a 279 for a 750 series to win by 26 pins. This gave Fred the top average of 216.

While they were settling their struggle, Ron Sharples also broke the 700 barrier with a 710 series that included a finishing game of 247.

A CHECK of the records in the Greater Detroit Bowling Association office lends credence to the claim that it is more difficult to bowl a 298 or 299 than it is to post a 300.

Thus far this season there have been 22 perfect games rolled compared to 13 at 299 and 10 at 298.

THE LATEST TO HAVE his dream of a perfect game shattered is Ken Schank, a member of the Castoff League at Garden Lanes.

Taking his regular turn this week, he piled up 11 strikes in a row, then left three pins standing on the final ball for a 297.

IT ISN'T VERY OFTEN that a bowler goes 100 pins over his or her average but Mary Pickens did it this week in the Coffee and Donut league at Westland Bowl.

Carrying an average of 141, she fired a 241 game and finished with a 374 series.

Sharing honors with her, Marcie Bashor found the range for a 602 series to pace the Ladies Classic at Westland, and Jane Martin came through with a 257 for high game.

Wayne fencer stays perfect

Wayne State University's fencing team came up short in its bid for a third straight Great Lakes Championship on March 8. Host Notre Dame copped the team crown, but the Tarters' pair of defending NCAA champions made individual history.

Senior Steve Danosi, a three-time All American, won his fourth straight GLC sabre title, going unbeaten in the tournament for the third straight year. He was 21-0 in his speciality, and became the first fencer to win his event four straight times.

Danosi, a graduate of Southfield High School, was voted the Outstanding Sabre Fencer by his peers for the second year in a row.

WSU junior Greg Benko, originally from Melbourne, Australia, won his third-straight foil title, posting a perfect 21-0 record. Other than Danosi, no other fencer has ever won more than two titles in the nine-year history of the Great Lakes Championships. Benko, a two-time All American, had his most impressive performance yet in GLC competition.

Danosi, son of WSU fencing coach Istvan, owns a four-year GLC mark of 66-1, while Benko is 53-3 in three years of GLC competition. Both fencers were 45-0 during WSU's dual meet season. Overall, both are 87-0 during the current season. In career dual meet competition, Benko is 131-1, and Danosi is 178-5.

WSU's other places at the Great Lakes went to senior captain Mark Masters of Southfield, who finished third in foil, sophomore Joe Znoy of Detroit, who took fourth in epee, and freshman Yri Rabinovich, of Odessa, USSR, who landed fifth in epee. Rabinovich, who came to Wayne by way of Israel and Italy, had a noteworthy performance in his switch to epee after a 42-3 dual- meet season in sabre.

BANKAMERICARD welcome here

Flint rally, press doom Rocks

By FRED DeLANO

There aren't any trophies for being the No. 3 schoolboy basketball team in Michigan, but if Plymouth Salem finds solace in that claim the Rocks probably could make it stand up even though eliminated by Flint Northwestern in the semifinals of the state Class A tournament, 59-53.

The evidence would lie in the fact that Plymouth defeated Saturday's other beaten semifinalist, Dearborn Fordson, in their only meeting during the regular season, and on the Tractors' court at that.

What the Rocks really wanted to go with their Suburban Eight, district and regional championships was a shot at Highland Park next Saturday for the state title. But that dream died in Jenison Fieldhouse on the Michigan State University campus Saturday.

WHILE PLYMOUTH partisans may blame everything from the Ides of March to inconsistent officiating for coming to the end of the line, the real villain was a pressing Flint defense which destroyed the cohesion of the Rock attack.

Even so, the Rocks finished their season with the finest record in Plymouth history—22-3—and as Coach Fred Thomann put it, "can be proud that in reaching the semifinals they went further than any Plymouth team before them."

NEITHER TEAM played what could be called classic basketball.

A bumbling first quarter saw the Wildcats from Flint take a 10-8 lead as the Rocks could sink only three of 12 shots from the floor.

Eric Agardy and Jim Ellinghausen began finding the range in the second period and paced Plymouth to a 16-point production that put the Rocks in a halftime deadlock at 24-all.

Flint sharpshooters Jim Person, Ed Simmons and Gary Nichols were the kingpins in pushing the Wildcats to a 35-30 margin midway in the third quarter, and Plymouth gloom was doubled by the fact that with four fouls the 6-10 Agardy was on the bench.

Then came the game's one surge that gave the Rocks the scent of victory as they shot from five down to four points ahead before the third stanza was over. Bill DenHouter, playing magnificently while subbing for Agardy, Brian Wolcott, Dan Moore and Ellinghausen combined for nine points in a row, and the Rocks were on top, 39-35.

Flint buckets by Person and Terry Thames, followed by a beauty from DenHouter at the buzzer, left Plymouth with a 41-39 lead when the period ended and Rock fans were in an uproar.

FOUR POINTS from Ellinghausen, the 6-8 junior, gave Plymouth a 45-41 bulge 90 seconds into the final period, but even with Agardy back in the lineup the Rocks couldn't hold it. Simmons, a game-long thorn parlayed with Thames to make it 45-45 and then 47-47. After that it was curtains for the Rocks.

Simmons went in on a steal to put Northwestern in front to stay at 49-47, followed with another quick basket, and although Agardy then scored on a hook he was called for his fatal fifth foul with 2:23 left and Northwestern on top, 51-49.

At the 53-51 level an apparent Plymouth hoop was nullified when offensive goal tending was called. From then on, Northwestern's keepaway ball handling, plus a couple of cheap breakaways, gave the Wildcats the upper hand.

"The tip they disallowed was the key call of the game," Thomann told reporters later.

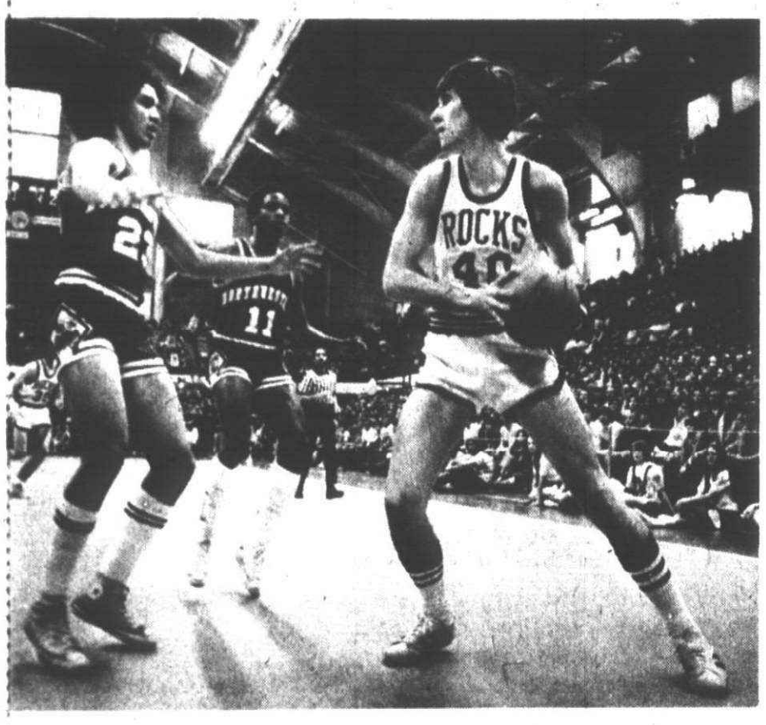

The Rocks were guilty of 27 turnovers, 10 in the first quarter alone, and were outshot from the floor by Northwestern, 25 goals to 18. Sensational free throw shooting, hitting 17 in 18 tries, was a major factor in keeping the Rocks in contention.

Ellinghausen was the game's top scorer with 22 points, Agardy adding 16 for Plymouth. Person paced Northwestern with 19, Simmons adding 16 and Thames 12. In rebounds Plymouth had a 30-27 edge.

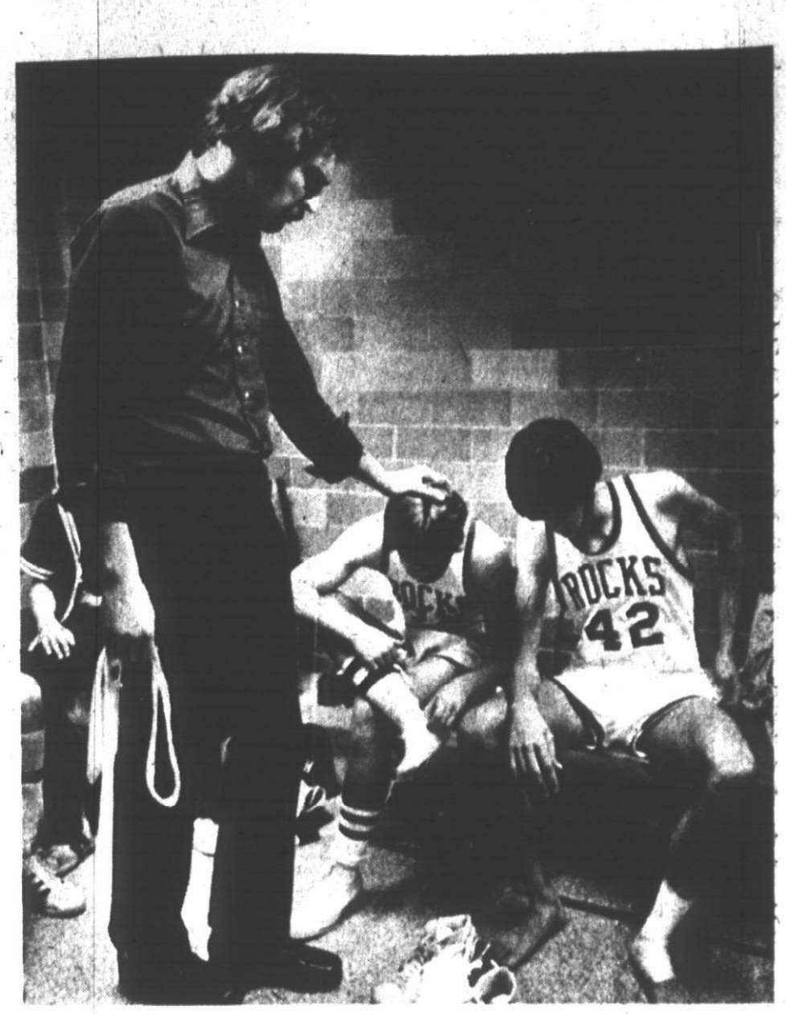

PLYMOUTH SALEM (53): Moore 0, 1-2, 1; Ellinghausen 8, 6-6, 22; Agardy 7, 2-2, 16; Dillon 0, 0-0, 0; Wolcott 1, 4-4, 6; Inch 0, 0-0, 0; DenHouter 2, 4-4, 8. Totals 18, 17-18, 53.

FLINT NORTHWESTERN (59): J. Person 7, 5-7, 19; Harvey 2, 0-1, 4; Stocker 0, 0-0, 0; Thames 6, 0-0, 12; Simmons 7, 2-2, 16; Nichols 3, 2-3, 8; M. Person 0, 0-0, 0. Totals 25, 9-13, 59.

Thomann 'Hold your heads high'

By TOM SCHRAM
Sports Editor

Eric Agardy sat looking off at a blank point in space.

Jim Ellinghausen worked listlessly at removing the tape from one ankle.

Bill DenHouter fought back the tears.

The silence in the small cubicle somewhere inside the maze which comprises Michigan State University's Jenison Fieldhouse was overwhelming.

MINUTES EARLIER Plymouth Salem had been eliminated from the Michigan High School basketball tournament in the semi-final round by Flint Northwestern, 59-53. And the three Salem big men, Agardy, Ellinghausen and DenHouter had each in his own way been instrumental in keeping the Rocks as close as they were.

Agardy had intimidated Northwestern on defense, grabbed several crucial rebounds hustled hard on both ends of the floor before leaving the game on fouls.

Ellinghausen had led the Rocks in scoring, pumping in his his soft 15-footers and doing a superlative job underneath.

DenHouter had come off the bench to spell Agardy when the big center collected his fourth foul early in the third period and again when Agardy fouled out. While in the game, DenHouter played with abandon, scoring eight points and picking up several assists.

NOW, EACH IN his own way, the three big men coped with the loss in the proverbial silence of the losers' lockerroom.

That silence, which belied the presence of 20 human beings, was broken by Fred Thomann, the Salem coach who had led the Rocks to their greatest season ever.

"It's always hard to end a season, but we can be proud of what we accomplished. It was a super season in terms of getting where we wanted to go and you can all hold your heads up high," Thomann told his team.

The the big coach went around the lockerroom, thanking each of his players for his work which brought Salem to within two games of a state Class A title.

Outside of the room, the Salem cheerleaders were busy drying their tears. The cheerleading squad had worked for an hour and one-half the day before the game, preparing a new cheer and getting the old ones down cold.

For them, too, the season was over.

THOMANN LEFT THE lockerroom to talk to an assemblage of reporters in a room adjoining the gymnasium balcony, high up inside of Jenison.

After he had left, the players showered and dressed and talked quietly among themselves.

Thomann offered no excuses to the media. He struggled for words at first but then spoke at length about the game and his team, which had finished with a 22-3 record.

When he had finished, Thomann started back toward the lockerroom, but paused briefly to gaze out on the brown and green Jenison floor where he had played his college basketball several years before.

Then he turned and walked back down the stairs toward the lockers.

"Damn," he said, shaking his shaggy head.

No other word so summarized the frustration of a team which had come so far, only to falter with its goal in sight. And no other word could have fit the occasion better.

First quarter spurt sparks Salem quarterfinal victory

It was Dick Vitale, the effervescent University of Detroit coach, who put into words what was in every Plymouth Salem fan's mind as the Rocks overpowered Pontiac Central, 70-57, to take their historic stride into the semifinals of the Michigan high school Class A basketball tournament.

"Eric Agardy is the most underrated big man in the midwest, and Jim Ellinghausen is the best junior in the state," bubbled Vitale after watching Plymouth score its quarterfinal triumph at Ferndale High School and thus qualify to meet Flint Northwestern in the semis at East Lansing.

A regular at recent Plymouth games in his bid to coax Agardy to don a U-D uniform next season, Vitale didn't have any trouble spotting Agardy and Ellinghausen as the standouts— nor did anyone else in the throng that packed the Ferndale gym.

The 6-8 Ellinghausen, only a junior, started with a sensational 16 points in the first quarter alone and finished with a game-high 28 in addition to hauling in 15 rebounds.

Agardi, 6-10 senior center who already has established career and season school scoring records this winter, pumped in 24 points before fouling out with 3:33 left in the game.

Plymouth's big first quarter, which saw the Rocks take a 22-8 lead, provided a needed cushion against the never-give-up jumping jacks from Pontiac.

Their own offensive punch, parlayed with another superb team defensive job, kept the Rocks in front by double figures all the way, but not without a struggle. The explosives Chiefs actually outrebounded the Rocks 33-30 (the first time that has happened this season) but their press never rattled guards Brian Wolcott, Tim Dillon and Howard Inch.

After Ellinghausen had hit eight of his 11 first period shots to pace the early rush, Plymouth led by 15 at the half (36-21) and by 16 after three quarters, 51-35.

With Agardy gone via the foul route, Pontiac pulled to within 11 (60-49) with two and a half minutes to play and was coming on like a race horse in the stretch. But the Plymouth poise paid off.

Wolcott hit from the floor, Ellinghausen got two jumpers in a row, Inch popped in a pair of free throws, and Wolcott came back for a driving goal that gave the Rocks 10 points to Pontiac's eight from Jeff Smith, Al Boule and Ernie Hill just when it mattered the most.

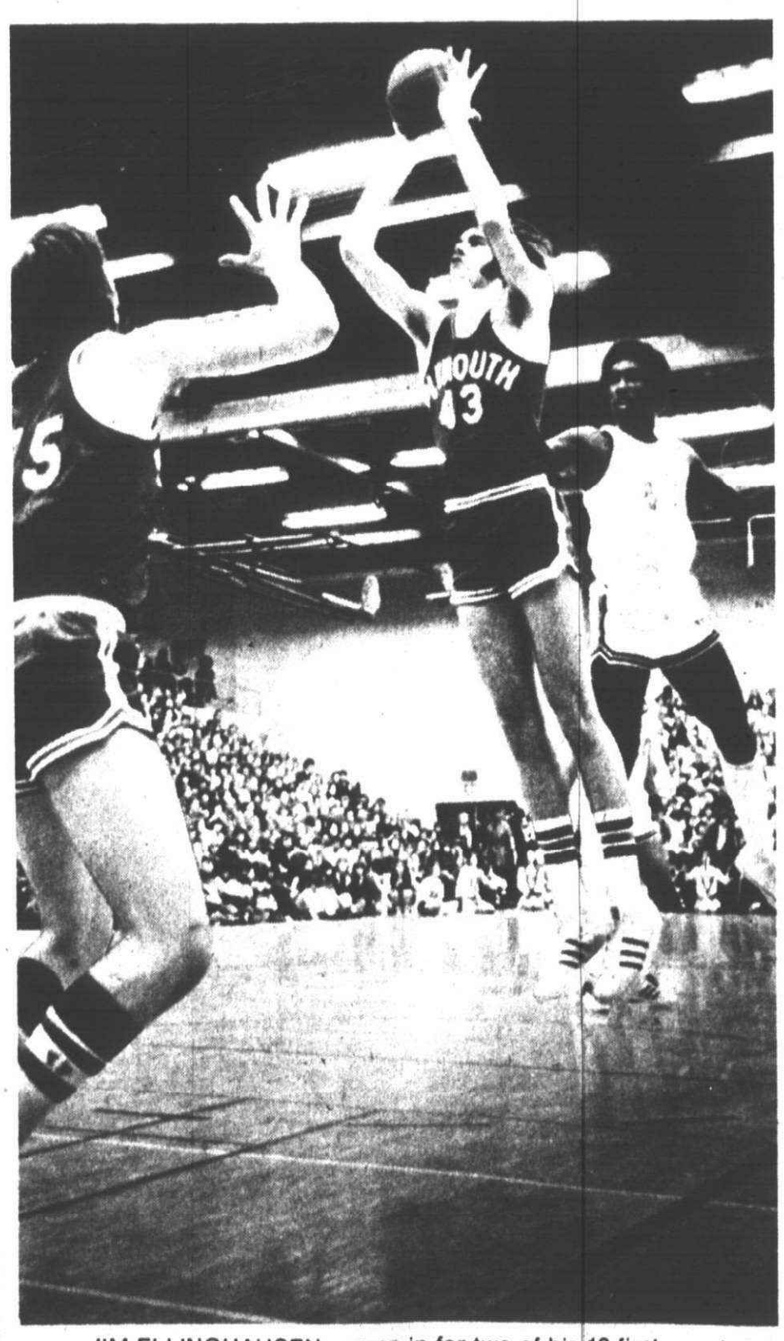

As a team, the Rocks shot 59 per cent on 32 goals in 54 tries to 33 per cent for the Chiefs who hit 24 of 73. Ellinghausen found the bucket 14 times in 22 shots and Agardy was 11 for 19.

The victory gave the Rocks a 22-2 record as they headed for East Lansing, and it marked the 19th time in those 24 games that they had limited an opponent to less than 60 points—a statistic which speaks volumes about the caliber of the team's defense.

PLYMOUTH SALEM (70): Dillon 2, 0-0, 4; Moore 0, 0-0, 0; Wolcott 4, 2-3, 10; Inch 1, 2-2, 4; Ellinghausen 14, 0-0, 28; Agardy 11, 2-4, 24. Totals 32, 6-9, 70.

PONTIAC CENTRAL (57): Hill 5, 2-6, 12; Smith 8, 4-5, 20; Bouie 7, 1-4, 15; Haynes 3, 2-6, 8; Cato 1, 0-0, 2. Totals 24, 9-21, 57.

PLYMOUTH SALEM 22 14 15 19--70
PONTIAC CENTRAL 8 13 14 25--57

JIM ELLINGHAUSEN moves in for two of his 16 first-quarter points in Salem's 70-57 quarterfinal victory over Pontiac Central.

Turf Tips, Quips

By Doc Minard

All Detroit area tracks, with the exception of the Hazel Park Racing Association, are assured of labor peace for this year and next as a result of new contracts with Local 79 of the Service Employes International Union.

The Detroit Racing Association, Wolverine Raceway and Hazel Park trots received ratification of the new contracts a week ago. But for some unknown reason the mutuel clerks at Northville Downs rejected the pact by a 55-53 count.

All of which caused the state labor mediator to sit down with the negotiating teams of the union and the DRA for a couple of marathon sessions which eventually brought the agreement.

It was quickly approved by the workers at the three tracks mentioned above by wide majorities.

Last Wednesday the Northville Downs employes voted a second time and approved by a 138-9 margin. What happened during the period between the two elections probably will never be known but Executive Manager John Carlo of the 'Downs is happy about the second vote.

Now it appears all of the tracks but the Hazel Park runners are set and negotiations between that track and the union will get underway soon. From all reports it will be a hard fight. Hazel Park was represented at all of the negotiating sessions between the DRA and the union and may have an idea of what to expect.

THE THREE-VICTORY string of Kool King, the five-year-old trotting star of the Stewart Oldford-Milt Lebenborn stable, ended Friday when it finished fifth in the weekly open trot at Northville Downs.

Kool King didn't appear to have its usual speed, trailed in the six horse field until the backstretch and then was equal to the task of passing the others as it did in the three victories.

The trotter was coming fastest of all in the drive to the wire but way out and just didn't have enough to overtake the rivals along the rail and in the middle of the track.

Incidentally the trot was won by Hobe Colby, a six-year-old which had a string of six earlier in the year before going into a prolonged slump that lasted for the better part of two months. This time Hobe Colby went postward at 15-1 and paid a fat $32.80.

Kool King was the odds-on favorite at 2-5 but this time his supporters had to tear them up.

OUT LIVONIA way, the runners are off to an excellent start for this early in the year at the Detroit Race Course.

The big mile plant was headed for one of its biggest weeks in several years in the winter days...that is until it ran into snow and high winds on Friday.

That storm was one of the strangest of the entire year. It blew and snowed so hard in the east side that highways were blocked and traffic warnings were issued.

But out Livonia way it was high winds, little snow and folks generally looked at each other in amazement when they heard the radio reports of the bad driving and even worse weather in downtown Detroit and on the east side.

It kept the DRC attendance down to 3,873 with wagering of $385,216...lowest of the opening week.

MIDWAY THROUGH the week, track officials learned that Jack Van Berg had given up his contract with the Shin Rorie Farm to devote full attention to a powerful stable he hopes to race in New York City.

That would be quite a blow to local fans who have always figured that things were OK and the popular Van Berg colors would be in the winner's circle just as often as always.

There was a time when the late Marion Van Berg, father of Jack, always had the best stable at the thoroughbred meetings in the Detroit area. He kept changing horses, shipping in from Nebraska, shipping to Chicago and to New York but generally keeping most of his better stock in Detroit.

But then the senior Van Berg died and Jack, his successor, doesn't have the same feeling towards Detroit that his Dad did. That's why he'll be in New York City and the midwest tracks will be minus Van Berg horses for the first time in almost 25 years.

Youth pin talent blooms

By W.W. EDGAR

Unlike many of the major sports that are in dire need of new talent and at a loss as to where it can be found, bowling is busting out all over with potential stars.

Since the start of the season, the youth leagues have been reaching new heights in both scoring and numbers with the result that there need be no fear that the adult leagues will be hard pressed for replacements.

It has been a rule of thumb that the adult leagues lose about 10 per cent of their membership from year to year. At times this loss has been felt, but not since the youth leagues have been placed on a high plane with competent instructors.

In her latest report Mrs. Ethel Heenan, director of the Youth Bowling Association, revealed the high scores bowled in all youth divisions this season. They follow:

PEANUT DIVISION
Richard Davis, Detroit	217
Steve Reeed, Lansing	486
GIRLS
Shelley Poling, Adrian	172
Melody Sisson, Jackson	408
PREP DIVISION
Dale Strike, Saginaw	256
Dale Strike, Saginaw	646
GIRLS
Yvonne Baron, Dearborn	227
Jean Cardeno, Saginaw	508
JUNIOR DIVISION
Cory Trainer, Pontiac	268
Todd Heinz, Saginaw	697
Anita Kiewiet, Kalamazoo	241
Brenda Kersten, Portage	241
Susan Marvel, Livonia	581
MAJOR DIVISION
Sam Hammond, Jackson	277
Sam Hammond, Jackson	681
Linda Wirth, Benton Harbor	231
Cassandra Ballard, Ben. Hrb.	551

In numbers, the youth already have reached the 17,000 mark for the first half of the season. The goal for the year is 36,000.

FINAL WEEK OF OUR $225,000 MARKET BASKET BONUS FOR GREEN TICKETS.

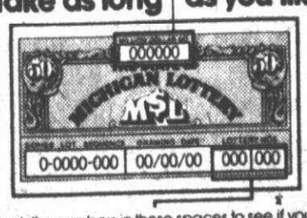

WIN $3,000 WORTH OF GROCERIES.

Match this weekly drawn number exactly, claim, and you are in the Million Dollar Drawing.

Spend it on anything you like. Take as long as you like. $3,000 worth of good things.

• After the regular 50¢ Green game drawing on March 13, 20 and 27, three "Market Basket" Bonus numbers will be drawn.
• If the numbers on your 50¢ Green ticket for that drawing date match any two of the three 3-digit Bonus numbers, you win a Bonus prize. Both winning Bonus numbers must appear on a single ticket.
• Your prize will be a $3,000 gift certificate redeemable for merchandise at any store that sells Lottery tickets. You name the store and we'll establish a $3,000 account in your name. Take as long as you wish to spend it. Certificate not redeemable for cash.
• Take your winning ticket to a Lottery Claim Center for processing.
• Prize projections are based on estimated ticket sales.
• Matching one regular 3-digit number wins $25. Match both regular 3-digit numbers and you're in the Super Drawing.

Check the numbers in these spaces to see if you're a Market Basket Bonus winner. You must have two Bonus numbers on a single ticket to win. Matching one 3-digit Bonus number does not qualify for a $25 prize.

Market Basket Bonus tickets are on sale March 4 to noon March 25.

HAPPINESS IS ONE STOP SHOPPING

HAPPINESS IS...finding groceries and merchandise under one roof.

HAPPINESS IS...Thrifty Acres with special departments such as Shoe Repair, Party Stores, Beauty Salons, Barber Shops.

HAPPINESS IS...special services such as dry cleaning, money orders, postal service, check cashing, and layaway, at many locations.

HAPPINESS IS...guaranteed satisfaction.

HAPPINESS IS...our "family" store with penny horses, Purple Cow, and in larger stores a Children's Oasis.

HAPPINESS IS...not needing to separate taxable from non-taxable items.

HAPPINESS IS...a clean store.

HAPPINESS IS...a friendly store.

HAPPINESS IS...Topco and name brand products.

HAPPINESS IS...unit pricing to assist in picking out the best values.

HAPPINESS IS...A Meijer Freshdate Book.

AND FOR US AT MEIJER
HAPPINESS IS... SERVING YOU!!!

KNOW THE PRICE BEFORE YOU BUY

THERE IS A WIDE difference in prescription prices from one store to another. Even right in the same town. So feel free to ask the price of the prescription before you buy.

WE KNOW our prescription prices are very competitive. At Meijer Thrifty Acres we prominently display the prices of about one hundred most often prescribed medications. If your prescription is not posted, please feel free to ask us the price before we fill it.

THE MEIJER PHARMACY is staffed by registered pharmacists who are licensed by the State of Michigan. They are fully qualified in every way to fill your prescription exactly as your doctor orders and will be glad to answer your questions.

YOU HAVE THE RIGHT TO KNOW the price of prescriptions before you buy. That's why we have listed the prices of several prescriptions on page 6 in this Meijer One Stop Shopping Guide.

This is the year to try something new. It makes no difference whether the "something new" is something very old in gardening history. The hanging basket graced Babylon's garden. When Noah grounded the ark he planted a vineyard. The children of Israel, on their way to the Promised Land, remembered the cool cucumbers along the banks of the Nile. The artichoke survived the fall of the Roman Empire.

So, let's explore. Let's feel the warm soil, smell the good compost, hear the corn growing at night, see all the sights along the way, as we try something new.

Dianthus 'Magic Charms', All-America winner, with hybrid vigor, early and abundant bloom on 6-inch plants.

A gourd of many names—Finger gourd, Holy gourd, Gourd of the Ten Commandments, Crown of Thorns.

Both leaves and flowers of the lowly nasturtium are ingredients of this colorful salad.

Try something new

Plant a plant you've never seen. Plant a vegetable you've never eaten. Whether you try something new or not, see something new. There's a whole big green world to explore.

In the something-to-remember category, is lavender. This year we remembered the low growing dwarf 'Mumstead' lavender, planted it again and the scent was as delightful and flowers as deeply lavender as they were long ago.

You just might try the nasturtium, new or old, as an exotic vegetable. The lively, subtle, peppery taste of its leaves is reminiscent of watercress. Chopped leaves and flowers contribute to all types of salads. Flowers can be used as carriers of cheese mixtures, or salads for the hors d'oeuvres tray. The plump, green, unripened seedpods, when pickled in vinegar, are very much like capers and are often substituted for them.

Don't forget the cat. The friend of all felines in the family is the showy, low-spreading catnip. An excellent border plant that bears small fragrant lavender-blue flowers. Cats love it, but even a good roll in the catnip doesn't seem to damage the plant too much.

Plant a vegetable you've never eaten. Jerusalem Artichokes, salsify, shallots, leeks, parsnips? See pages 6-7.

Flowers/Vegetables

To many a gardener, the charm of a vegetable garden is in its orderly, straight rows.

There's a different kind of beauty in such flower and vegetable combinations as these:

A staggered border of blue lobelia and 'Tiny Tim' alyssum—behind that a row of cabbage with blocks of 'Thumbelina' zinnias between each head of cabbage.

A row of marigolds between rows of potatoes give a good contrast near harvest time.

'Salad Bowl' and 'Ruby' lettuce are beautiful with Iceland poppies.

Red chard and dwarf alyssum with the old King Alfred daffodils—it's spring again.

Yellow violas and parsley, mixed together and planted 10 inches apart make a lovely sight in the spring, with the yellow violas shooting up through the green mountain of parsley.

A groundcover of strawberries beneath an old apple tree. The dainty blue flowers of the ground-covering myrtle, vinca minor with red-stalked rhubarb.

At your garden store

For the shopper for color in the garden there's always something new.

You can expect more shade-tolerant plants. The popularity of impatiens and coleus has brought on several new introductions by the commercial growers. The 'Carefree' coleus is a self-branching type which remains dwarf and bushy (with little summer pinching) the entire growing season. It takes shade or half-day sun and is an excellent houseplant.

The hybrid impatiens in the Elfin, Imp, Shadeglow, and Minette series have performed beautifully in lighting up shady areas with bright colors. Now comes the Ripple series with large star-patterned bicolor flowers. Also new is the large (2 inch) flowered Grande mixture on dwarf plants.

The All-America winner dahlia "Redskin" is a most welcome addition to the low-growing annual dahlias. Bushy, dwarf plants to 15 inches high provide a gaily colored mixture of double 1½ inch flowers with contrasting bronze leaves.

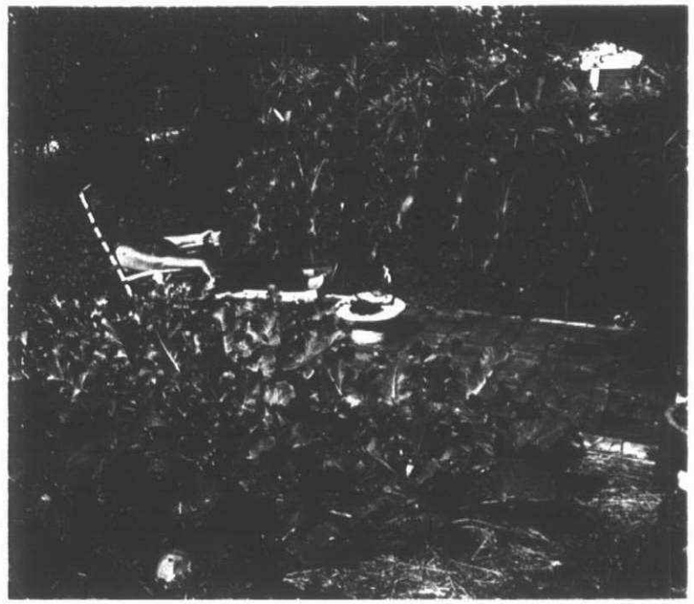

For early spring planting and for pots in the fall months the 1974 All-America selection dianthus "Magic Charms" in coral, crimson, pink, scarlet, white, or in a mixture, deserves space in the garden. You'll get a much longer period of bloom if seed heads are removed after flowers drop.

Another 1975 All-America winner is the 'Imperial Blue' pansy. This F_1 hybrid offers an extremely long flowering period. Its flowers are clear light blue with contrasting bluish violet face and gold eye.

Of the plants we used in hanging baskets last year our surprise was a little plant with the common name of creeping zinnia. Botanically its Sanvitalia procumbens. It bears tiny, golden-yellow, daisy-like blooms with dark centers; very free flowering. Its billowy, trailing habit makes it most attractive in hanging baskets. May be brought indoors in the fall.

Where to find it

New varieties of vegetables and flowers are seldom universally available. No one garden store or seed company catalog can find space for the hundreds of old and new varieties. If you have trouble finding any vegetable or flower variety mentioned in this book, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Reader's Service, Ortho Lawn and Garden Book, Chevron Chemical Company, 200 Bush Street, San Francisco, California 94104, and we will send you our "Where-to-find-it" list.

There comes a time in a well-planned garden when you can relax and watch the vegetables do their special thing.

New vegetables

Since every home garden is an experiment station more or less, there should be room for a trial or two of the promising new varieties. Here follows our report on what's new with tomatoes, melons, peppers, and the oriental cabbages.

Tomatoes

Will another tomato variety produce more fruit than the one you grew last year? The choice is wide. Probably the most talked about new variety is 'Early Girl.' Its earliness—rated to set fruit in 45 days from setting out transplant—is one reason for its claim to fame. But unlike many early varieties, it continues to set fruit throughout the summer and fall.

Where the growing season is short, choose an early maturing variety. It requires less total heat and generally sets fruit at lower temperatures than mid-season or late varieties.

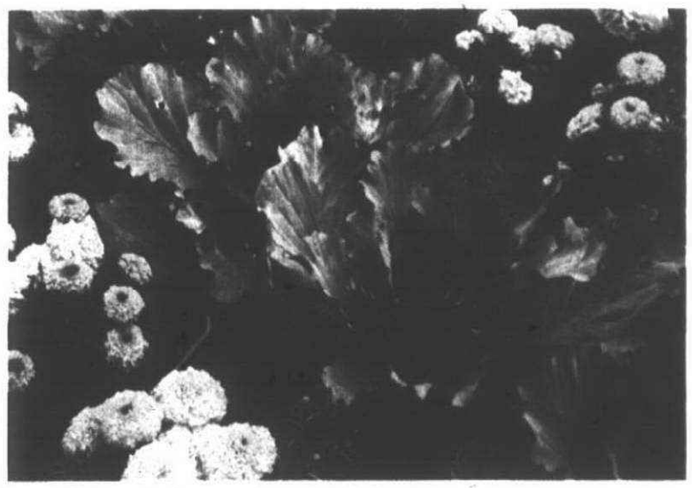

Tomato trials throughout the midwest and northern tier of states rate these varieties at the top of the list:

'Spring Giant' (65 days). Vigorous bush type. Verticillium and fusarium resistant. Good yield of 1½ pound fruits, if you're lucky.

'Springset' (67 days). A heavy yielding hybrid with resistance to both verticillium and fusarium wilt. Noted for its ability to set fruit in cool weather. Vine is vigorous, compact bush type.

'Campbell 1327' (69 days). Vigorous, fall bush type. Extra large fruit. Verticillium and fusarium resistant.

'Jet Star' (72 days). Big producer of large fruits free of cracks and scars. Vines are indeterminate in growth (fruit continues to set on new growth) and can be grown on stakes, trellis, wire cages, or on the ground. This hybrid is resistant to both verticillium and fusarium wilt.

'Better Boy' (72 days). Triple disease resistance. Yields continuous harvest of large, one pound fruits. Some gardeners harvest 50 pounds from one plant.

'Burpee VF' (72 days). A good producer of medium-sized fruits, thick-walled and meaty, with excellent crack resistance. Grow in wire cages.

'Heinz 1350' (75 days). Resistant to both verticillium and fusarium wilt, and crack resistant. Vines are semi-determinant and grown on the ground.

'Sunray' (85 days). Yellow-orange, large, meaty tomatoes with sweet, mild flavor. A tall indeterminate grower generally grown on stakes, trellis, or wire cages.

Tomatoes in containers

There are a number of tomato varieties suitable for containers and hanging baskets. The smallest is 'Tiny Tim,' a 12-inch plant with cherry-sized fruits. The next in fruit size 'Small Fry' with 1-inch fruits. However, 'Small Fry' is a vigorous grower to 30 inches and should be staked or used in a hanging basket. It produces hundreds of fruit—8 to 10 in a cluster. 'Burpee Pixie Hybrid' grows 18 inches tall with clusters of 1¾ inch fruit. 'Presto Hybrid' is about 24 inches tall with high quality 1½ inch fruits. 'Patio Hybrid' is a step larger, growing to a sturdy, compact 30 inches, with 2-inch fruit.

All except 'Patio Hybrid' and 'Small Fry' are in scale with 6 to 8 inch pots. All bear quickly—60 to 70 days—and can be grown indoors as well as out. Give 'Patio Hybrid' a 12-inch or larger pot, or plant in the ground.

Edible-podded sugar peas

The edible-podded sugar pea or snow pea is a cool-season crop and should be planted in early spring as soon as the ground can be worked.

Pick when very young, just as the peas start to form. If you miss that stage, the peas can be shelled and eaten, but the pod will be tough.

In Oriental cookery the young pea pods are parboiled and used to garnish meat and fish dishes. They are also used in green salads after they have been allowed to cool. The most familiar dish that one usually finds pea pods in is mixed vegetables.

The low grower (24 inches) 'Dwarf Gray Sugar' can be grown without staking. The taller growers, 'Mammoth Melting Sugar' and 'Oregon Sugar Pod' are easier to pick if grown on a trellis.

The lettuces

Choice of varieties is all important. Lettuce is a cool-season, short-day crop. Some varieties are best planted in late winter, others produce as a fall crop.

There are four types of lettuce and several varieties of each type.

Crisphead. The crisphead types have firm heads and brittle texture. Such heads withstand long distance shipping and are the most important commercial type.

'Great Lakes 659' needs cool weather. May be bitter in hot weather. Plant for a fall crop in mild winter areas. 'Ithaca' is a non-bolting, tip burn resistant variety for spring and summer crops. Tends to break down in late fall weather.

Butterhead. The head is less firm and smaller than the crisphead. Leaves are soft and pliable, with a delicate buttery flavor. Leaves bruise and tear easily.

Representative and choice varieties: 'Dark Green Boston' for very early planting; 'Summer Bibb,' and 'Buttercrunch' as the slow-bolting types.

Looseleaf or bunching. They do not form heads. The leaves are clustered or pressed together and only the young leaves at the center of the plant overlap to an extent.

'Grand Rapids' and 'Prizehead' and 'Black-seeded Simpson' are recommended early varieties. 'Slobolt,' 'Salad Bowl,' and 'Green Ice' are the more heat resistant varieties.

Cos or romaine. Long, narrow leaves form a loaf-shaped head. Leaves are coarse looking but are tender, sweet and mild flavored. Recommended varieties are 'Parris Island Cos', and 'Dark Green Cos.'

The variety of lettuce which frustrates many a home gardener is the old 'Bibb' variety. You may know it as 'Limestone.' Lettuce buffs class it as highest in quality of all lettuce varieties. The plant is loose and spreading when young, compact when mature with leaves closely clustered to form a small round head. Leaves are thick and brittle, with a delicate buttery flavor.

'Bibb' became the name of a lettuce introduced into the U.S. about 1890 as 'Half Century.' A Major John Bibb, of Frankfort, Kentucky, is credited with popularizing this type of lettuce. 'Half Century' disappeared from the seed trade for a while and when it returned, it was called 'Bibb' and erroneously 'Limestone.'

It is said that the name 'Limestone' came from the fact that early growers found that it could be produced in the old limestone quarries of Kentucky.

The frustration in growing 'Bibb'/'Limestone' is its habit of bolting to seed prematurely unless its requirements for temperatures and day length are met. It is at its best as a fall crop or when grown in a cool greenhouse.

'Summer Bibb,' a cross between 'Bibb' and a slow bolting variety is the result of development work at Cornell University.

'Buttercrunch' is a more vigorous, larger 'Summer Bibb.' Neither of the slow bolting butterhead Bibbs equals the original 'Bibb' in quality, but they come very close and they are far easier to grow.

Flowering Cabbage/Kale

For fantastic color in the garden, and for a one-plant indoor bouquet in the fall, plant flowering cabbage or kale.

Wherever commercial growers have let gardeners see the plants you'll find transplants at your garden store about August 1. If these plants are not offered in your area, sow seeds in mid July.

Color and form varies plant by plant (see photos). They are more beautiful—colors are intensified when frosted.

Of all the flowering plants in the fall garden, none can compete with these leaf-flowers.

The flowering cabbage has wavy leaves giving the plant the look

Raised bed, three railroad ties high, for highly productive potato crop in the Sid Harkema garden. See page 6-7.

Strange looking kohlrabi, beautiful sliced into a salad or eaten raw.

of a giant peony flower. Leaves of flowering kale are heavily fringed and waved.

Finger food

A vegetable garden isn't complete without a quota of "impulse" vegetables—the pull-wash-munch kind. To the obvious choices of radishes, turnips and carrots we have added and highly recommend kohlrabi. It's good raw food and, chilled and sliced, it's a delight.

Kohlrabi is a cool season, fast-growing vegetable, taking only 55-60 days from seed to pulling size. Plant for successive harvests for both spring and fall crops. Harvest before it is mature—when bulb is about 2 inches in diameter. Woody stem fibers develop through the edible portion when fully developed.

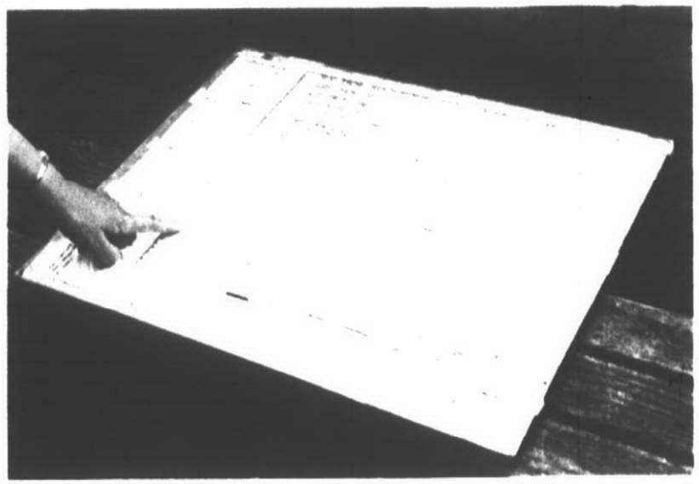

If you are planting turnips, give the variety 'Tokyo Cross' a trial. It's an All-America winner, with good resistance to disease. Best quality harvested when 2-inches in diameter, but will grow to 6 inches without becoming pithy.

NEVER ONE SQUARE FOOT OF IDLE GROUND

Here's how one family manages to produce a year's supply of vegetables—and have fun doing it.

The garden plot is 45 feet by 75 feet. The soil has been conditioned over the years with peat moss, lime and a yearly addition of compost.

The planning of the garden is a family affair—the family being the Sid Harkemas' of Grand Rapids, Michigan and their 5 children.

The planting plan fixed the location of each crop and the crop that followed.

Their growing season averages 170 days from the last frost in spring (May 1) to the first in fall (Oct. 17).

The eating season is 365 days—from harvest to harvest—thanks to a 27 cubic foot freezer and Mrs. Harkema's willingness to can 700 to 800 quarts of fruits and vegetables.

The high productivity, according to Sid, is the result of planned succession of crops—never one square foot of idle ground—optimum planting dates, maximum use of space and choice of variety.

Sid told us: "I have a family of 5 children and since they help grow the vegetables they are also crazy about eating them. Every year we try some new varieties as well as our old favorites. All this takes a lot of space—more space than I have. For that reason I have worked out a double-cropping schedule (see chart above).

The first column is an alphabetical list of the vegetables that we are growing this year.

Column B is the optimum planting time. By optimum I mean two things: first, the best planting time as it fits into the schedule of the garden, and secondly, some vegetables such as beans can be planted as early as May 1, but the plants become stunted and do not yield as well as they would if they were planted a couple of weeks later. For that reason I have May 15th as the optimum time for planting beans.

Column C is the amount of lineal feet devoted to that particular vegetable. When we made up this list, my family and I sat down at the table and looked at past yields per foot of each row to determine how much space to allot to each vegetable.

Column D is used to indicate succession—whether or not the crop in that row is the first crop

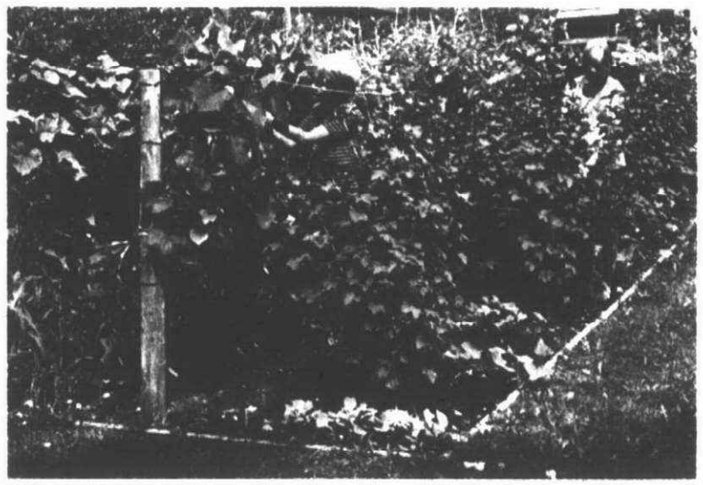

For tomato growing the wire cylinder increases yields of unblemished fruits.

On one vine of 'Burpee VF' we had more than 20 fistfull size tomatoes ripen at the same time.

Onions will be harvested and out of the way when parsnips spread their leaves wide.

Here's the beautiful result of intensive gardening, the careful crowding of vegetables to get a maximum harvest.

or the second."

Succession of crops appears simple on paper. In the garden it becomes complicated when spacing of the crops differ in widths such as when lettuce is followed by cabbage or potatoes.

Sid gets around that difficulty this way: "The rows in the garden are all 2 feet apart. I have these permanently marked off on the railroad ties that border the beds. I know that some crops require more than 24 inches of space. But by spacing them farther apart within the row I can usually make do. With the 2-foot wide beds throughout all crops are interchangeable. When the time comes to follow one crop with another I can plug in any type of crop.

"To make maximum use of space, all carrots, radishes, beets, parsnips, onions and the like are planted in double rows within the 2-foot space. Crops that should be planted in rows 30 to 36 inches apart are spaced further apart within the row.

"In some cases I will try to get 3 crops out of the same piece of ground. For example, an early crop of spinach comes off in June. It is followed with potatoes. Before the potatoes are harvested, a planting of kale goes between the potatoes which are harvested before the kale is mature.

"This close spacing has more advantages than increasing production. With the foliage of all plants touching there's a canopy above the soil. The need for weeding and hoeing is lessened. The foliage of the plants acts as a mulch. The vegetable garden is a thing of beauty."

Every gardener has his own idea of the best varieties. Sometimes it's based on production; sometimes on taste. Here are a few of Sid Harkema's comments:

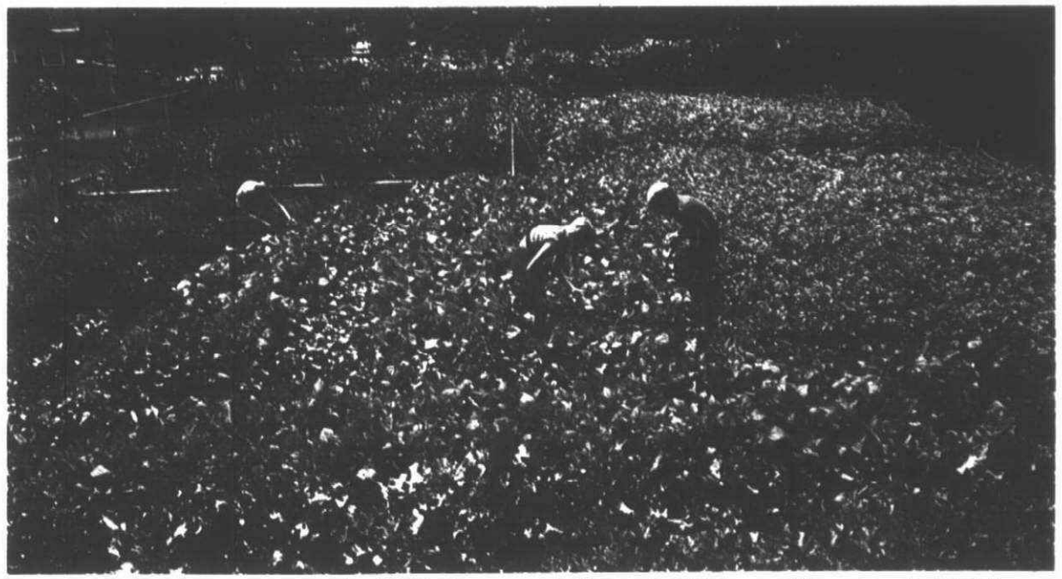

Jerusalem artichokes. I never thought the family would like them, but they love those crazy looking knobby roots. The plant is hard to kill. Volunteers all over the place. This year we hope to produce about 100 pounds.

Beans. I try some new variety each year, but the one we stick with for a bush snap bean is 'Contender.' It produces a 6-inch long round pencil pod type and is extremely productive. On July 24 we finished picking our spring seeded crop. From a 200 foot row we harvested a total of 250 pounds. I always plant my main crop of beans on May 15 and harvest all the beans in 4 pickings, 4 days apart. This year the first harvest was July 12 and the last July 24. The kids have the most fun picking the last harvest. They can pull the plants out of the garden and sit on the picnic benches and pick the beans in the shade.

Carrots. I usually seed the main crop of carrots the first week of June. Even if you leave these in the ground all through fall into winter, they don't set seed and they stay sweet as honey. We prefer the 'Nantes' and 'Chantenay' types. We usually get about 300 to 350 pounds of carrots a year.

Celeriac. This is the first time for us this year. I don't know anything about it, except that it does wonders for soup.

Lettuce. We start the lettuce as early as possible in the spring and finish up as late as possible in the fall. Last fall I seeded the last patch about the first of August and covered it with a plastic-covered structure. We harvested lettuce up until the middle of December.

All photos on these pages are of the Sid Harkema vegetable garden. Sid says: "Some people think I spend all my time gardening. This is not so. My family and I draw up a map in early spring, write up a time schedule for each vegetable and then allow the garden to happen."

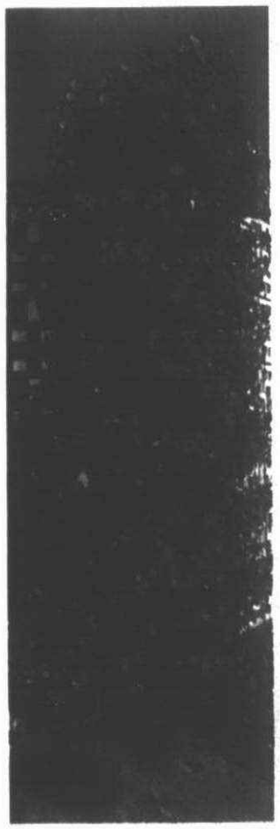

The space-saving vertical garden

As ground space for gardens gives way to the apartment balconies, decks, patios and roof tops, there's only one way to find growing space—go skyward, go vertical.

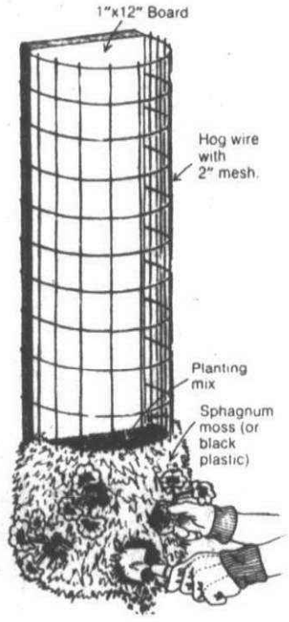

More than 10 years ago we began our search for more growing space in every square foot of ground space. Our starting point was a "Petunia Tree" we saw in Salt Lake City. All of our initial trials (see progress illustration in panel below) were with vertical gardens built in much the same manner as a wire hanging basket. The building materials were wire mesh, sphagnum moss, and light weight planter mix. Growth of plants in these "trees" was better than expected. We grew all kinds of lettuce, tomatoes and cucumbers as "salad trees"; marigolds, alyssum, iberis, campanula and violas, gave the trees seasonal color.

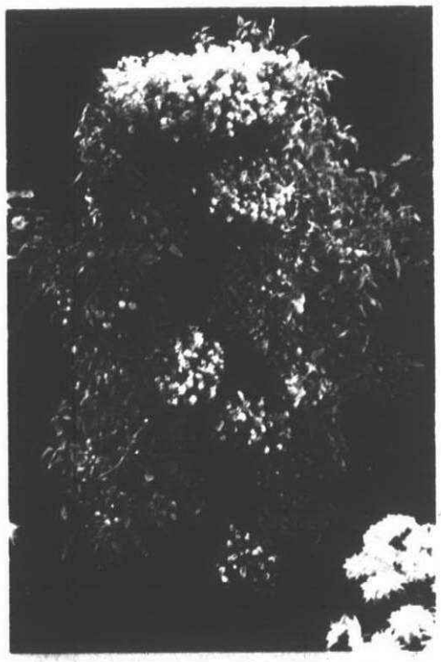

In the early days we over-scaled the units; there was no need for the amount of planter mix we used. The column we found most useful was the half circle of wire nailed or stapled to a 1 by 12-inch redwood board. Excellent growth of strawberries, vegetables and flowers occurred in half-circles of no more than 6 inches in diameter. In effect we took a 5-foot-long row of plants in a 12-inch mounded raised bed and stood it on end.

The size of the wire mesh was important. All were planted with transplants. Although the root ball can be squeezed through a very small opening, we soon used only hog wire or welded wire with 2-inch mesh.

The original petunia "tree" was made with a half circle of 2-inch mesh wire, stapled to a 1x2 inch board. A lining of sphagnum moss retains the planter mix. Petunia seedlings were inserted through the moss.

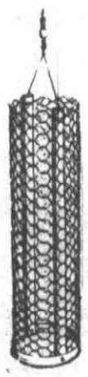

Built of 2-inch mesh wire shaped as an octagon, faced on 4 sides with wood panels and cross braced. Lined with plack plastic film and filled with planter mix. The tomato 'Small Fry' drapes from top. Alyssum planted both at top and inserted through the plastic at sides.

Tomatoes and cucumber in this "salad" tree had more soil than they needed in this half circle of wire secured against a fence. Sphagnum moss was used to line the wire and hold planter mix. Dwarf marigolds were used for a touch of color.

In early experiments cylinders of chicken wire with wooden slats and can bottoms for stiffening were used for hanging planters. Difficulty in planting through such a small-mesh wire ruled out chicken wire in subsequent trials. The fisherman's swivel was a success.

In the evolution of column vertical gardens we changed from sphagnum moss to black plastic film to hold the soil mix. And we became choosy about the soil mix. Only a light-weight mixture of peat moss and vermiculite or perlite, such as the U.C. or Cornell "Peat-lite" mixes were used.

The black film is not as gardenesque as sphagnum moss but the plants soon cover the plastic and we seem to get earlier growth as compared to the sphagnum vertical garden.

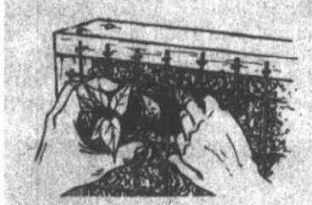

In the last 2 years we have experimented with the vertical box as photographed below. In early spring the box is planted with lettuce—leaf lettuce, butterhead and romaine. In the summer, the box is planted with fibrous begonias, impatiens and coleus.

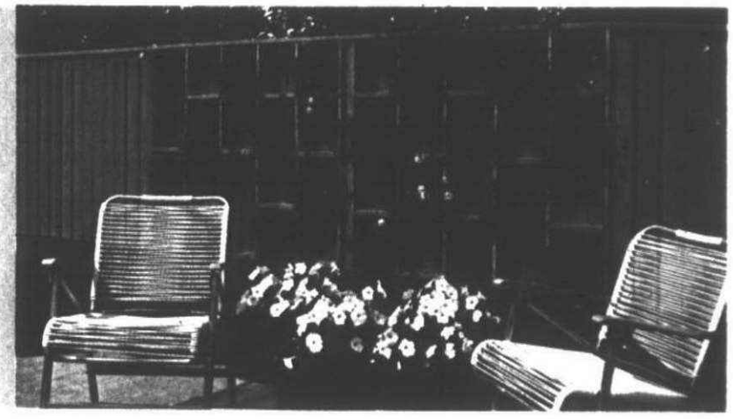

The box could be any height. We made it 50 inches high. Cross pieces are 1 by 2 inch with openings 8 inches square. Details of construction are diagrammed below.

The pipe for watering is 1¼ inch plastic pipe with ¼ inch holes drilled throughout the pipe. This method of watering may not be necessary but we found watering without them too much of a guess between "too much" and "not enough" for thorough wetting. Regardless, the mix should be moist when filling the box. And no matter how light the mix, water at 8.3 pounds per gallon gives the box plenty of weight as it is watered.

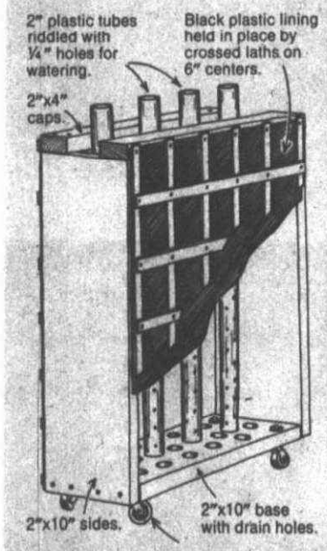

The wheels used to give the box easy portability should be large casters which turn 360 degrees.

Best growing medium in the limited depth of the checkerboard fence is sphagnum moss. Hold it in place with welded wire of 2x2 inch mesh.

Spring planting, in the roll around, of lettuce in variety was followed by a planting of impatiens and fibrous begonias.

Make room for strawberries

The highlight of the delights of a home garden is the strawberry patch. And there is no need to take the word "patch" literally —the strawberry is a most accomodating plant.

As seen in these pictures, the strawberry can be grown successfully in a variety of situations—in containers of all kinds, in a vertical garden, in hanging baskets, with or without plastic or organic mulch, or used as an edible ornamental serving a wide variety of landscape uses.

Whether growing strawberries in containers or in the garden, the soil you plant them in should be well drained. Do not set the plants too deep or too shallow. The bud should be set level with the surface of the soil.

Gardeners who grow strawberries in containers in a disease-free soil mix don't have to worry about verticillium wilt and red stele (root rot). Both are caused by soil-borne fungus. To ensure success, start with plants certified to be disease free.

If you have grown strawberries for several years, you know their performance is not exactly predictable. The quality of the same variety may differ from one year to the next due to differences in the weather pattern and soil conditions.

Also, if you have gardened in several locations, you have learned that what is the "best" variety in one location is only fair in another area. Varieties available at local garden stores are adapted to your area. In choosing adapted varieties, you can play it safe by checking with the office of your County Agricultural Extension Agent.

Every year new strawberry varieties appear and older varieties are dropped by commercial growers for reasons of production, performance, shipping ability, and comparison taste tests. The supply at garden stores will be a mixture of the latest commercially recommended varieties and those with local appeal. Since firmness for shipping is not important in the home garden, you may not agree with taste tests of the commercial grower.

The following are some of the recommended varieties you may run into in your area:

'Earlidawn,' 'Midland,' 'Midway,' 'Redstar,' 'Surecrop.' Everbearing: 'Ozark Beauty,' 'Ogallala,' 'Gem,' 'Geneva.'

If aphids, leafhoppers or mites attack, spray with ORTHO Fruit & Vegetable Insect Control.

Botrytis fruit rot may be serious in wet years and in beds that are too crowded. To prevent fruit rot, spray with ORTHOCIDE Garden Fungicide when new growth starts in spring and repeat applications weekly.

When you start from scratch don't miss the sights along the way

Growing vegetables and flowers from seed has its special rewards. There's high drama in the sprouting of many seeds. The seeds themselves have a special kind of beauty.

The author of the introduction to Seeds–the Yearbook of Agriculture 1961, Victor R. Boswell, had a good eye for seeds: "The details of the surface relief of many seeds are even more beautiful in design and precision than the mass of the seeds as a whole. Often you can find minute surface characters of surprising kinds. Surfaces that appear plain and smooth to the unaided eye may be revealed under a good hand lens to have beautiful textures.

"Surfaces may be grained or pebbled. They may have ridges like those of Doric columns. They may bear geometric patterns in tiny relief, forming hexagons, as in a comb of honey, or minute dimples may cover the surface. Some irregular surface patterns of surprising beauty sometimes appear under the lens. Surface may be a dull matter, or highly glossy, or anywhere in between.

Last but not least in the beauty of seeds are their surface colors. They may be snow white or jet black. The color may be a single solid one, or two or more may be scattered about at random. Colors may form a definite pattern that is distinctive and characteristic of the species and variety. The colors may be almost any hue of the rainbow–reds, pinks, yellow, greens, purples–and shades of ivory, tan, brown, steely blue, and purplish black."

Starting from scratch with seeds should not be considered a job for experienced gardeners only. We watched a kindergarten class grow a dozen different plants from seed with the help of a teacher who was learning about plants along with the kids.

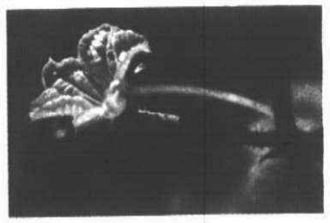

The seed starter kits, the peat pots, and Jiffy 7's (see page 24) made the going easy.

The full story of our experiments with the green world and children of all ages is crammed into a book of 54 pages–A Child's Garden–A Guide for Parents and Teachers.

Books are available from Public Relations, Chevron Chemical Company, 200 Bush Street, San Francisco, CA 94104. The price is 50*c*. Single copies free to teachers.

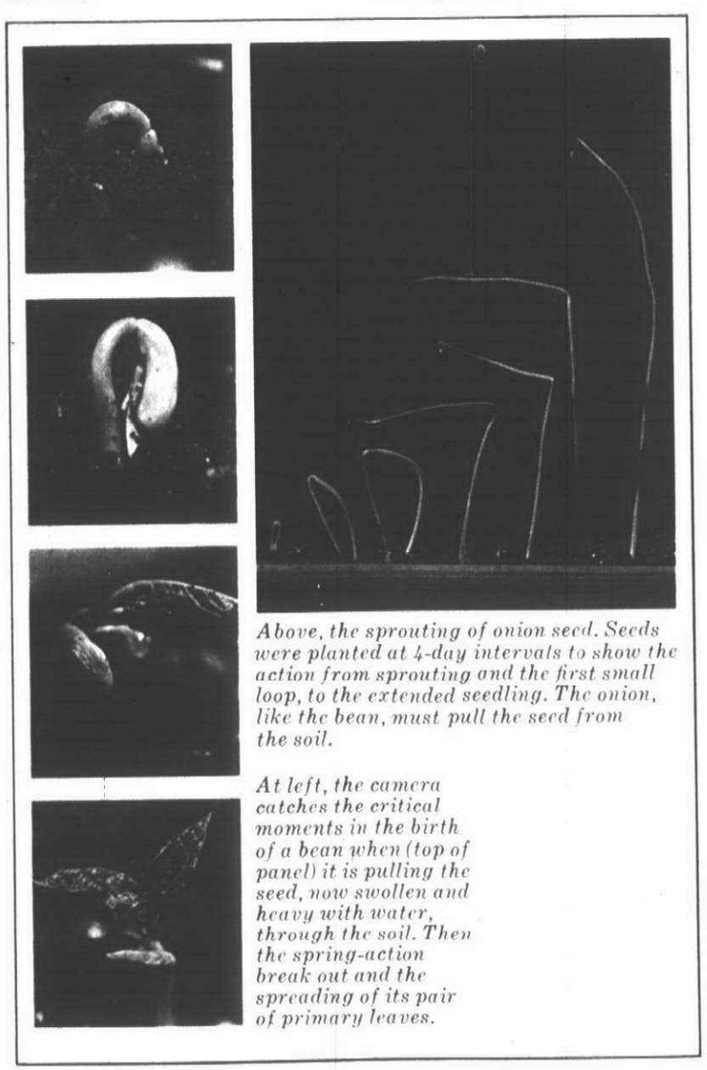

The kindergarten class at the St. Helena Elementary School grew plants of dianthus, peppers, tomatoes, squash, cucumbers, basil, dwarf and tall marigolds, dahlias and balsam, and staged a successful spring plant sale. See text.

Trouble shooting... with a light hand

The gardeners who seem to avoid serious trouble from insects and disease are those who make friends of their plants. They visit them frequently. They inquire into their good health. They know, or soon learn, the pitfalls of the plant they are growing. They protect them from insects and diseases with sprays or dusts when necessary. When is it necessary? In these pages we point out a few ORTHO products prepared for safe and sane trouble shooting.

ISOTOX...ISOTOX...

When a plant's in obvious trouble and the trouble is caused by "something damaging the leaves," the kindly act is "spray with ISOTOX." The full name of which is ORTHO ISOTOX Insect Spray. But to several generations of gardeners, ISOTOX is the spray. These gardeners should take the time to find out the cause of the trouble, but through experience they just reach for ISOTOX. Read the label and you'll see why.

It's a wide spectrum insect spray formulated to clean out many kinds of sucking and chewing insects and spider mites. In addition, it has systemic action. It gives the plant internal protection against many sucking insects. Follow label instructions. It's for use on ornamental plants only. Do not use ISOTOX on edible fruits and vegetables.

They lurk in darkness

You might see the trails of slime. You are sure to see the chewed leaves of slugs and snails. These night feeders are a major problem where moisture and cool, humid, cloudy weather prevails. ORTHO SLUG-GETA Snail & Slug Bait is the product to use. It contains MESUROL®, which produces a paralysis soon after feeding, preventing the slug or snail from retreating to shelter as daylight approaches. Use it for a clean-sweep control with flowers, shrubs, vines–everywhere except the vegetable garden.

In the vegetable garden take care of slugs and snails with ORTHO BUG-GETA Snail & Slug Pellets.

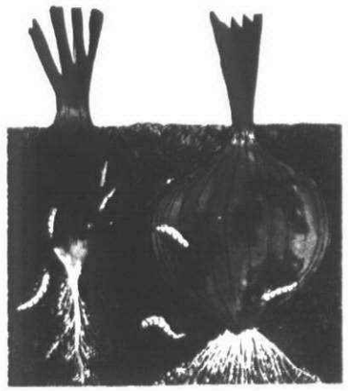

You may be too late

It doesn't pay to wait for signs of trouble to apply fertilizers in the vegetable garden. The hunger signs of yellowish leaves or stunted growth generally appear too late for effective timing. For example, many short-season vegetables require the full amount of fertilizer in the soil at planting time. In this short life span there is no time to control mistakes.

The label on ORTHO Vegetable Garden Food 5-10-10, in 5 and 25 pound packages, will give you the right fertilizing program when starting from seed and setting out transplants.

"Look what happened to my radishes"

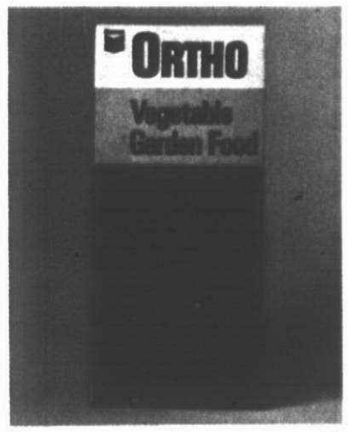

The little worms or maggots that bore holes in radishes and onions are always discovered when it's too late to do anything about them. For the best insurance against their damage, dust ORTHO DIAZINON® Soil & Foliage Dust over the furrow after seeding. This mild treatment will kill the maggots as they hatch. Follow label directions.

Instant "treatment" in home and garden

ORTHO Home & Garden Spray in a pressurized can is ready for instant use in the garden, when spot treatment on a plant or two is needed. Or use it to clean out infested house plants–African violets, philodendrons, geraniums, begonias. Spray indoors and outdoors for house flies, mosquitoes and gnats. Take care of house invaders–roaches, earwigs, spiders, centipedes.

If you have used similar products in the past with only passable results, try this new development. Many times more effective than Pyrethrum and as environmentally safe.

About the chart

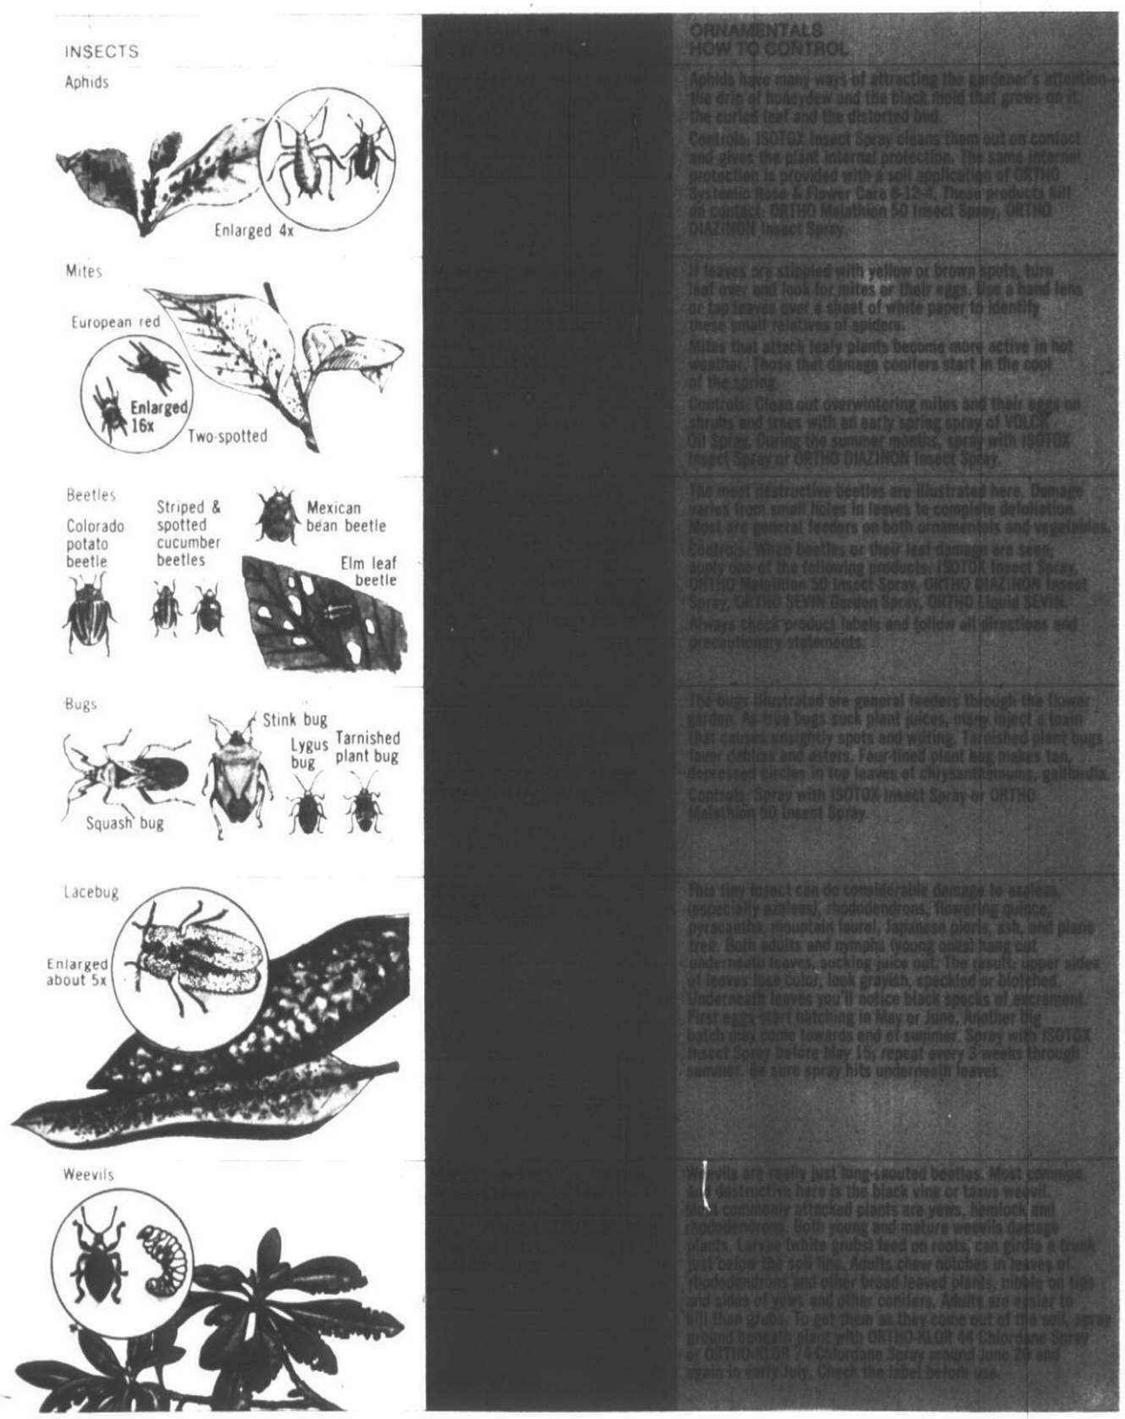

The insects most likely to cause trouble in the flower garden and the vegetable garden are paraded within these pages. Each pest is matched with the product or products to use for control. Note that some of the products in the Ornamentals Column are not to be used on vegetables. When vegetables are planted in flower or shrub border, choose a spray or dust that is listed for both ornamentals and vegetables.

In using any garden chemicals, including those referred to in this book, please be sure to read the entire label carefully in order to obtain the most current use information and to avoid accidental misuse. Note the number of days you must allow between the last application of the product and the harvest of the vegetables. The number of days vary by product and crop.

For example, time lapse of ORTHO SEVIN Garden Dust: 0 to 3 days, except on leaf lettuce: 14 days. ORTHO Malathion 50 Insect Spray: 0 to 7 days. ORTHO Tomato Vegetable Dust: 1 to 7 days, except on raspberries: 14 days. Observe all pre-harvest intervals listed on product labels.

A thing called chlorosis

Chlorosis—the lack of natural green color in the leaves—is a physiological disorder caused by one or more of several conditions. It occurs frequently in soils containing an excess of lime, since lime fixes iron in the soil and makes it unavailable to plants. However, the most common causes are the unfavorable growing conditions that occur in soils with or without excess lime—too much water in the soil due to poor drainage, overwatering, or prolonged rains; low soil temperatures in a cold spring.

The application of ORTHO Greenol Liquid Iron to the leaves and the soil of a chlorotic plant will help correct chlorosis. It is especially helpful where applied as new growth forms in the spring.

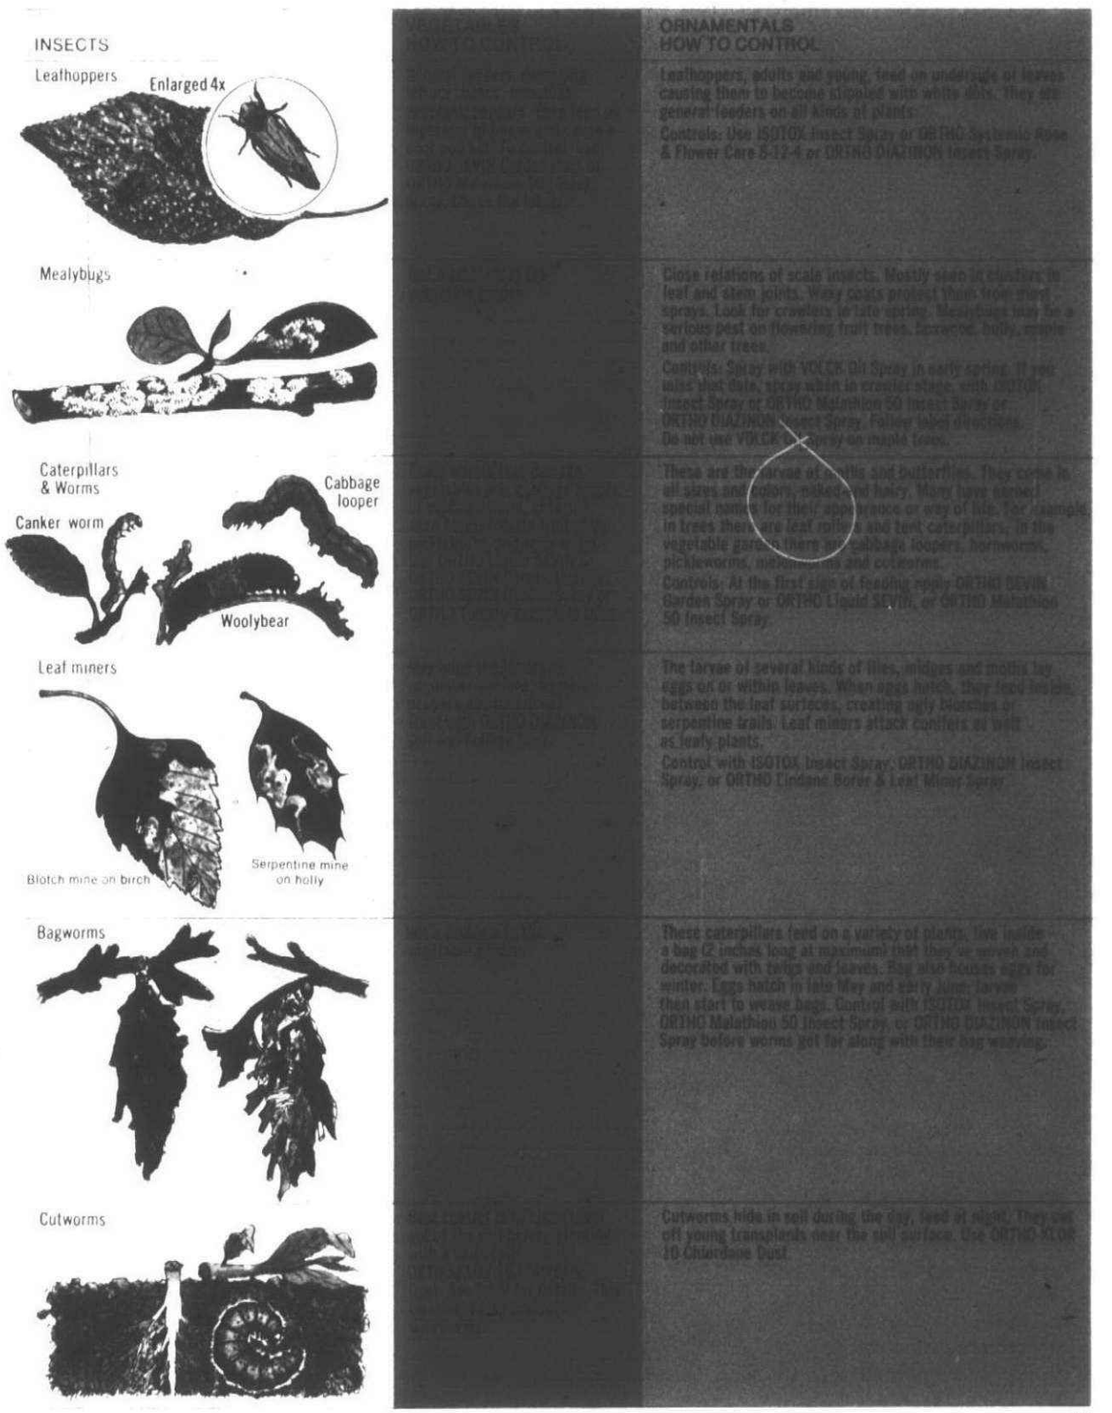

At winter's end

At winter's end the recovery of evergreen plants from the effects of a cold winter is painfully slow, especially if winter is followed by a cool spring. In the cold soils of early spring soil applied fertilizers are not directly available to the plant roots. Soil micro-organisms necessary to convert the fertilizers, are inactive. However, a foliage nutrient spray will supply nutrients immediately. The plant begins green growth before the roots are able to absorb nutrients from the soil. The product to use is ORTHO Evergreen & Azalea Food 10-8-7.

Gopher protection

Two families of gophers practically ruined our garden last year. This year we have gopher-proofed one section by building a 12-inch deep raised bed and lining the bottom of the bed with ½-inch mesh wire.

Vegetable diseases

The very best way to avoid crop failure due to diseases, either soil borne or foliage diseases, is to plant disease resistant varieties.

When you choose a variety, whether as a transplant, in a seed packet or from a catalog, check what is said about disease resistance.

One of the reasons for the introductions of varieties, in tomatoes and cucumbers especially, is to provide disease resistance. Some of the diseases that plague various vegetables are:

Tomatoes: fusarium, verticillium, and nematodes.

Cucumbers: scab, mosaic, downy mildew, powdery mildew.

Snap beans: mosaic, powdery mildew.

Cabbage: virus yellows.

Spinach: blight, blue mold, downy mildew, mosaic.

Melons: downy mildew, powdery mildew.

The occurrence of all diseases is not universal. You may be able to grow tomatoes or melons which have no disease resistance. But if you had trouble last year, switch to resistant varieties.

Read the label

For best results and safety read, and be sure you understand, the entire label before using any garden chemical and follow the directions faithfully.

With all pesticides the application is at least half the battle. You must spray both the upper and lower leaf surfaces as well as the soil around the base of the plant.

Never spray grass or any plant that is suffering from lack of moisture. Water deeply and thoroughly a few days before spraying. Wait a day or two after a period of strong wind so moisture lost from leaves can be replaced—leaves should be turgid. And, never spray when bark or leaves are wet from dew, rain, or sprinkling—you'll lose much of the spray's effectiveness.

Your own safety

Read the label every time you spray or dust and note especially all the cautions and warnings.

Mix sprays on a solid, level surface to avoid spillage.

Avoid spilling pesticides on the skin or clothing and wash exposed skin areas thoroughly with soap and water.

Do not eat or smoke while spraying. Wash hands thoroughly with soap and water immediately after spraying.

Keep all chemicals out of the reach of children. Store in a locked cabinet or on a high shelf. Set aside a special set of mixing tools, measuring spoons, and graduated measuring cup. Use them for mixing and measuring sprays only. Be sure to keep all chemicals in their original labeled containers at all times.

Don't store left-over spray. Any spray left over in the sprayer should be poured into a hole 18 inches deep and covered over.

Before disposing of empty pesticide containers they should be allowed to drain upside-down for at least 30 seconds; then rinse thoroughly with water three times, allowing 30 seconds for draining after each rinse. Used containers which have been rinsed and drained in this manner are ready for disposal by accepted local methods, such as crushing and burying or recycling when appropriate. Do not burn empty containers.

The right spray equipment

ORTHO water-powered sprayers are precision built to deliver the right mixture of spray at all times. The water pressure may vary from 20 to 80 pounds per square inch without changing the effectiveness of the spray.

ORTHO SPRAY-ETTE 4 delivers up to 4 gallons of spray—enough for 8-10 medium-sized shrubs or up to 800 square feet of lawn. ORTHO Super Six SPRAY-ETTE delivers up to 6 gallons of spray—enough for 12-15 medium-sized shrubs or up to 1200 square feet of lawn.

ORTHO labels call for teaspoonfuls or tablespoonfuls per gallon of water. To fill the 6 gallon sprayer, use 6 times the gallon rate. Use 4 times the gallon rate for the SPRAY-ETTE 4. You can translate measurements with the table of equivalents.

Everything looks better with a well kept lawn

When the camera looks at a flower border or a shrub planting or even a vegetable garden, the photographs that win are the ones with some sort of lawn in them.

The options are as many as there are climates from Kansas, the southern parts of Missouri, and Indiana to the Canadian border and beyond. Here we go from the northern limits of the warm season grasses, through a mixed transition zone to the cold resistant varieties of the north. Most lawn makers are concerned with the bluegrasses, perennial ryes and fescues.

For a short course in how-to-know the grasses, we recommend reading the labels on grass seed mixtures. Changes are being made.

New turf-type ryegrass

Everywhere, except in the extreme North, the turf-type ryes are revolutionizing lawn seed mixtures. Not long ago the common ryegrasses were not looked upon as proper companions for the improved bluegrasses. They, the common perennial types, were and are found in the utility mixes and appreciated for their ability to out distance weeds and weedy grasses, in a new turf grass planting.

With the introduction of the turf-type perennial ryegrasses, notably 'Manhattan' and 'Pennfine', a new chapter was written in the history of lawn seed mixtures. The new perennial ryegrasses were bred specifically for soft fibers, to provide clean cutting. When mowed, they do not have the frayed ends that give a turf containing common ryegrass a brownish cast.

In addition to their remarkable mowability, these ryegrasses have narrower leaves than the common ryegrass and blend well with the bluegrasses.

So today, when you read the label on the seed packages, don't be surprised if you find the new perennial ryes in the fine lawn mixtures.

And, the sowing of mixtures, rather than single varieties, are recognized even by the growers of the "improved" bluegrasses—such as 'Fylking', 'Pennstar', 'Galaxy', 'Baron', 'Glade', 'Adelphi', 'Sodco', 'Nugget', and many others. The new emphasis on mixtures does not detract from reputation of the improved bluegrasses, it simply acknowledges that we haven't yet found the grass that performs perfectly in all situations.

The seed mixtures offered may be for sun, or shade, or utility. The mixture varies by the packager, with varieties of improved bluegrasses, strains of common bluegrass, turf-type rye grass, Chewings fescue and red creeping fescue used in varying proportions. The proportion of the individual grasses in the mixture varies with the mixture's price and purpose.

Because soil, shade, temperatures and the willingness of the owner to care for the lawn's appearance vary by the individual site and owner, the mixtures make good sense. The lawn may not develop in the same mixture as shown on the package. The grasses best adapted to your situation will eventually take over.

How not to have lawn weeds

A lawn that is weedless is one in which the grass has grown so vigorously that weed seeds never had a chance to sprout and grow. Weed seeds are everywhere. Sunlight shining on open moist ground makes weed seeds sprout. If, for any reason, grass becomes weak or sparse enough to create bare spots, weed seeds will surely sprout and grow there.

The no-weeds tactic then is to keep lawn grass growing vigorously—so thick there's no room for weeds to get a start.
But even in the best of lawns, weed seeds may blow in, ride in with birds or on people's shoes. Pull or spot-kill broadleaf weeds with ORTHO WEED-B-GON Jet Weeder while weeds are small. If many weeds crop up, you'll want one of the larger-scale controls described here.

The broadleaf weeds. This group includes such all too familiar types as dandelions, plantain, knotweed.
The basic control for these and many other lawn weeds is ORTHO WEED-B-GON in its several forms. It can single out broadleaf weeds growing amongst grass, and without injuring the grass can kill the weeds from the tops down to the roots.

Spring is a good time to control the broadleaf weeds for two reasons: (1) The weeds are smaller and more vulnerable than later on. (2) The weed killers that control them are formulated to work best in cooler weather of spring and fall, not midsummer heat.

Since the spring is also a good time to feed the grasses, it's the time to use the combination product: ORTHO Weed and Feed 25-3-7. This product encourages lawns to grow dense and crowd out weeds, and kills weeds already there.

Certain broad-leaf weeds—oxalis, chickweed, clover, English lawn daisy, prostrate spotted spurge—are easier to kill with ORTHO Chickweed & Clover Killer. It does the best job in early spring when temperatures stay low. That's when many weeds are just starting out and are most vulnerable.

Crab grass

Crab grass sprouts in spring. By early summer the weeds stand out as coarse, broad eyesores. They mature, bloom, set seeds by late summer, die in the fall.

To prevent crab grass, apply ORTHO Crab Grass Preventer Plus Lawn Food 19-3-3. This product lays a chemical barrier over the soil and kills sprouting seeds as they come up through it. Apply before weeds sprout.
If you've missed the preventative treatment you can control already sprouted crab grass with ORTHO Crab Grass & Dandelion Killer. If possible, spray before the big surge of growth in late spring. The bigger weeds become, the harder they are to kill.

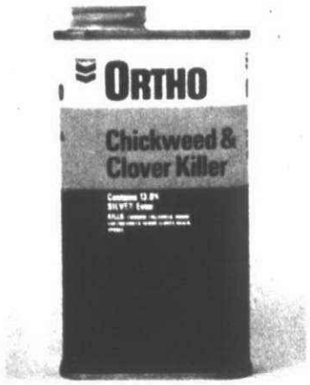

In addition to crab grass and dandelion this product will wipe out plantain, knotweed, purslane and pennywort in bluegrass lawns. Check label for directions on other grasses.

To prevent crab grass from coming up along with spring-seeded lawns or in bare spots, use ORTHO Spring Seeding Crab Grass Control Plus Fertilizer 18-3-6. This prevents crab grass germination but doesn't interfere with lawn seed germination.

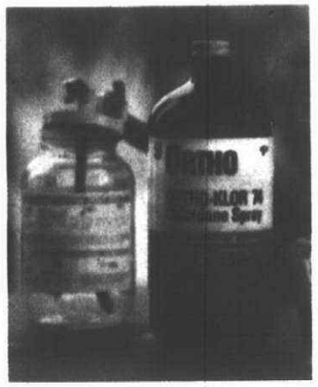

Poa annua (annual bluegrass), is a yellow-green grass with roots so shallow that large patches in your lawn turn brown and die with the first hot weather in summer. Use ORTHO Crab Grass Preventer Plus Lawn Food 19-3-3 in fall and follow up in late winter or early spring.

Sod webworms

The sod webworm spends the winter as a partially grown larva several inches deep in the soil. In spring it moves to the soil surface and begins feeding. By late June and early July adult moths emerge and soon begin to scatter eggs at random in the grass. The second generation which appears in late July and August cause the most damage.

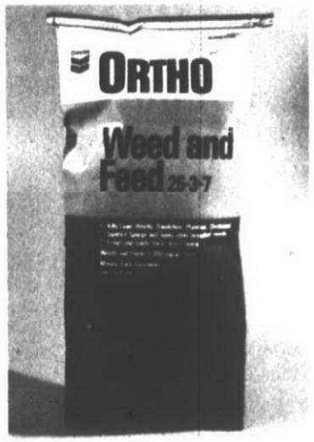

Sod webworms prefer grass in a new lawn that is lush and thriving. They prefer sunny areas and seldom damage lawns in shade.

The larvae live in the thatch on the surface of the soil in small silken tunnels. They cut off grass blades just above the thatch line, pull them into their tunnels, and eat them. The close clipped grass appears as a brown patch about the size of a softball. If the infestation is heavy, large areas of grass may be damaged severely or destroyed in only a few days.

ORTHO Sod Webworm Control contains ASPON which is highly effective in controlling sod webworms and chinch bugs. One application will keep them out for at least 8 weeks. See label.

Grubs

Grubs damage turf by eating roots of grass plants about an inch below the surface of the soil. They are the larvae of several kinds of beetles that lay eggs in the lawn in summer. Although various sections of the country have their special beetles, the grubs (larvae) are similar in appearance and habits. The eggs laid in summer soon hatch into tiny grubs that feed lightly on grass roots until fall or early winter when they burrow deeper for the winter. When the soil warms up in spring they move into the top layer of soil and with big appetites feed on the new tender grass roots. They grow rapidly as they feed. Grubs usually lie in a curled position. They are whitish or grayish with brown heads and brown or black hind parts.

A few grubs per square foot can cut roots so completely that sections of the lawn can be lifted from the soil like a rug.

The best time to treat the lawn for grubs is in late summer or early fall. The grubs are small then and easily killed. This timing should prevent damage in spring. ORTHO-KLOR 44 Chlordane Spray or ORTHO-KLOR 74 Chlordane Spray are the products to use. Follow directions on the label. Remember that the grubs are below the soil surface. The spray must be carried into the soil by watering after treatment.

Lawn diseases

Before attempting any controls, it's important to be certain that your lawn is suffering from disease and not from pests or some other problem. One way to tell is to scrutinize the grass blades. As a rule, insect-chewed grass looks ragged or lopped off. Diseased blades (not dead yet) usually show some disfigurement—dark margins, straw-colored spots, dark blotches, bleached spots, shriveling, browning.

The diseases that you are most likely to encounter own a variety of names—leaf spot, foot rot, melting out, fading out, brown patch, dollar spot. It's not necessary (it's practically impossible) to match names with disease. One product takes care of most, singly or in concert. It's ORTHO Dyrene Lawn Disease Control.

One common group of diseases occurs mainly during cool wet spells in spring. Their names—melting out, leaf spot and zonate eye spot or dying out—pretty well describe their behavior.
To protect against them, spray with ORTHO Dyrene Lawn Disease Control when first leaves are formed in spring, and continue at 10 to 14 day intervals until warm, dry weather comes. Other diseases—notably brown patch—come in summer. Prevent by spraying weekly during hot moist weather.

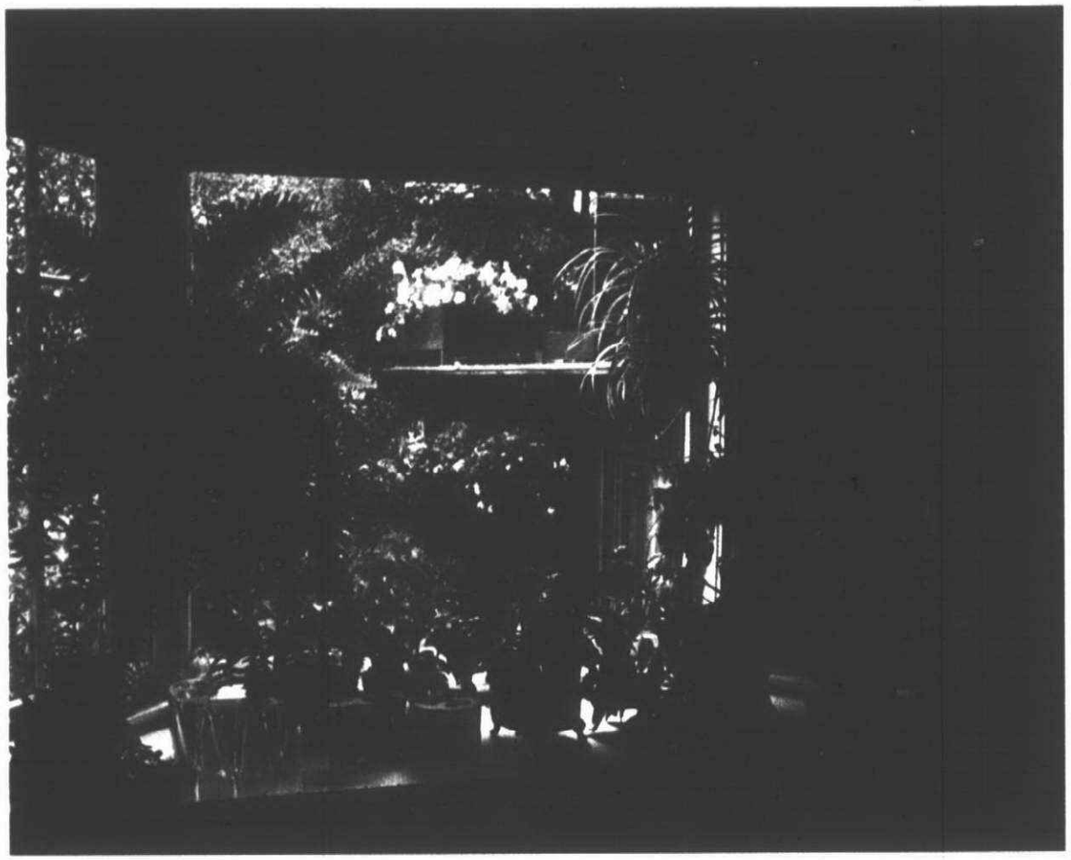

To prevent late winter and early spring damage of snow mold, spray once after the first killing frost. Repeat during a mid-winter thaw and again after snow melts in winter or early spring.

To help a lawn recover from any disease, mow the whole lawn, rake, fertilize, water well, then apply ORTHO Dyrene Lawn Disease Control at the "curative rate" given on the label. Repeat at least three more times at weekly intervals. Reseed dead patches.

ORTHO Spot Weed & Grass Killer

This pressurized container sends forth a foam that kills green vegetation. It doesn't sterilize soil or move in the ground, so you can use it near plants without endangering their roots. It will not harm trunks or shrubs or trees whose bark has turned brown. Use it for edging driveways, walks, patios and lawns.

Indoor-Outdoor planting. A deep bay window accommodates lots of plants; close grouping promotes a more humid atmosphere for healthy plant growth.

Indoors, Outdoors, all around the house

When you plant in portable containers, indoors or out, you enter upon a total and intimate partnership with an individual plant. The plant performs if you keep it happy; and if it doesn't you can't blame it on the weather.

The fundamental problem of finding the right place for the plant, or vice versa, is generally a one time decision when planting in the ground. With potted plants you have the chance to second guess yourself as often as you like, or as often as you and the plant can tolerate.

In this interaction between yourself and a pot of decorative greenery you may learn a lot about the plant, and even more about yourself. You may turn out to be a true plants person, with parsley and chives in the parlor and a giant philodendron that takes over the kitchen. On the other hand decoration may be your thing, and you put the plant where it makes the room look best and toss it out when it becomes unhappy. Most of us will fall somewhere in between; we will try to find the right plant for a particular place, and the place with just the right conditions for a particular plant.

Location isn't everything, but without it—the right soil mix, a perfect watering schedule and all the rest of your loving care will avail very little.

Light intensity

In summer when the sun is high only those plants very close to a south window may get some direct sun, depending upon the latitude and the amount of roof overhang, while those plants on the same shelf slightly further back will get only light from the sky. In the same window in winter all the plants may get full sun for much of the day. In the full sunlit areas the light intensity will be about 8,000 foot candles. In the immediately adjacent areas that receive light from the sky it will measure about 500 foot candles. Such a south window will ripen potted tomatoes in winter and provide excellent light conditions for a Boston fern in summer; in fact both plants could coexist in the same window for much of the year, if the fern hangs high above the directly sunlit area and the tomato is kept low and close to the window to get maximum direct sunlight.

A plant/light inventory

An inventory inside our house shows a range of plants that seem quite happy in locations with light intensities from 64 foot candles up to 8,000. Not too surprisingly, the plant locations outside the house cover essentially the same intensity range. However, it is hard to find a place outside the house that falls below 64 foot candles on a bright day, while most of the interior is below that level.

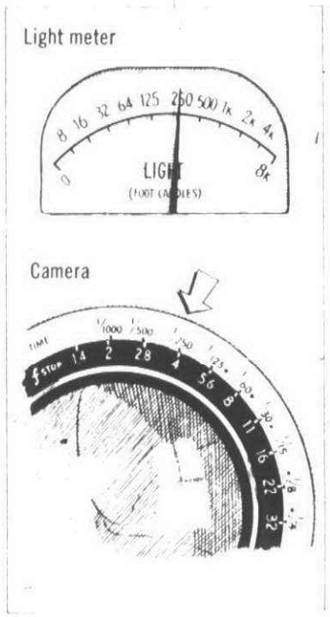

From this it is apparent that our indoor and outdoor plants are interchangeable, at least when the temperatures and other conditions are compatible. Of course the winter sun is less intense, the day length shorter, and the number of days of full sun during summer and winter would seem to present an even greater variable. Summer fog in some coastal regions may cut the total possible sunshine by 50%, while rains and overcast may cut the total winter sun by an even greater amount.

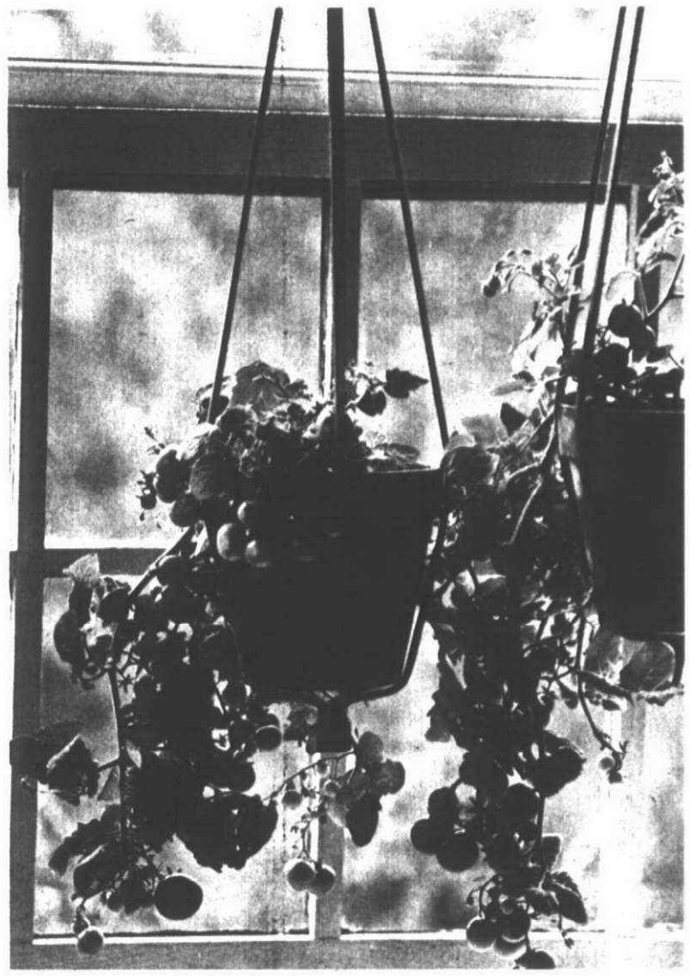

While overcast days drastically reduce the amount of light falling on plants in direct sunlight situations, they do not necessarily reduce the illumination on plants in a window situation where they receive their light from the sky. In fact, the light intensity in such an indoor situation may be more than twice as bright on an overcast or bright cloudy day, as it is on a clear day, when the illumination comes from a deep blue sky.

Luckily for those of us who provide the mobility for lots of pots, very few plants wither and die suddenly when light conditions aren't just right. Most will mark time for long periods in light considerably below optimum and thrive again when the right illumination is provided. With practice and observation we learn the places that our plants prefer by the reaction of the plants themselves.

It is possible to shorten this trial and error process, if you know the light requirements of your plants. Many books, particularly those dealing with plant culture under artificial light, list the preferred light intensity range for many plants.

Photographic Light Meter Readings. If you have a photographic light meter that measures incident light directly in foot candles, it is easy to check the light intensity at various locations in and about your house. It is more likely that you have a meter or a camera with a built in meter, that only gives you an exposure setting. In the latter case, if you set the film speed at ASA 100 and aim the meter at a white card placed to approximate the plant leaf surface position, the shutter speed reading (taken as a whole number) that will appear opposite f4 will correspond to the approximate foot candles of illumination; i.e. if the indicated exposure is 1/250 sec. at f4, this will be 250 foot candles.

'Atom' tomatoes in six inch pots in a south window produced a winter crop of over 600 fruit each.

Spider plants' (Chlorophytum) progeny fly gracefully from macrame held pots.

An illumination inventory of your house will probably reveal that there are many areas where you would like to have plants that are at the low end of the light scale. In many houses the only areas with light intensity above 250 foot candles are the window sills themselves. Except, of course where the direct sun shines in and abruptly pushes it up to 8,000 or more. 250 foot candles is about the same as the illumination 1-foot away from a 100 watt bulb in a reflector and 8,000 foot candles is great for the eggplant in your vegetable garden, but likely to cook your asparagus fern.

There are windows and windows

The flexibility of plant placement within a room will be dictated by the size and number of windows and the brightness of the walls. The light intensity very close to a small window will be very much the same as it is with a large window. However, as we move away from the small window the intensity decreases more rapidly. Ten feet away from a large window wall the light intensity may still be half as bright as it was 6 inches from the window, while 10 feet away from a typical casement window it may be less than 1/10 as bright as it was 6 inches from the window.

The light intensity fall-off as you move away from the immediate window area will be much less in a light painted room than it is in a dark one.

Where direct sunlight strikes the window, the use of a sheer white curtain will not only decrease the light intensity of the sunlit area, but it will also increase the intensity of light in the areas further away from the window. In a typical case using a white nylon net curtain which decreased the direct sunlight from 8,000 foot candles to 2,000 foot candles, the light five feet away from the window was increased from 125 foot candles to 250 foot candles.

South windows. If you have one or more large south windows that receive full winter sun for most of the day, you can:

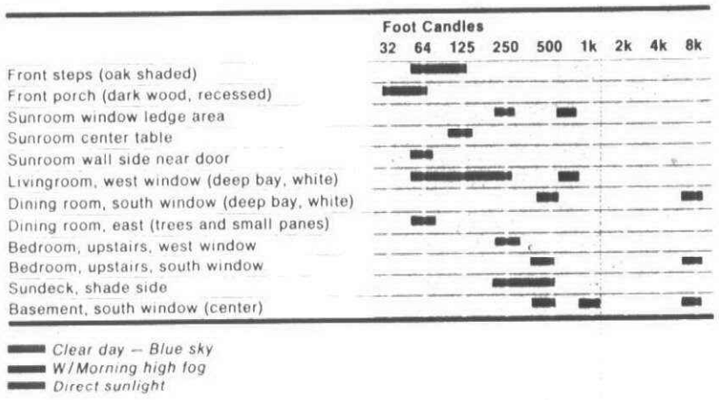

Grow a small vegetable and herb garden all winter, even a big zucchini in a rolling tub.

Maintain a small avocado tree or citrus through the winter. Wheel it outside for the summer.

Keep a minimum maintenance garden of cacti and succulents.

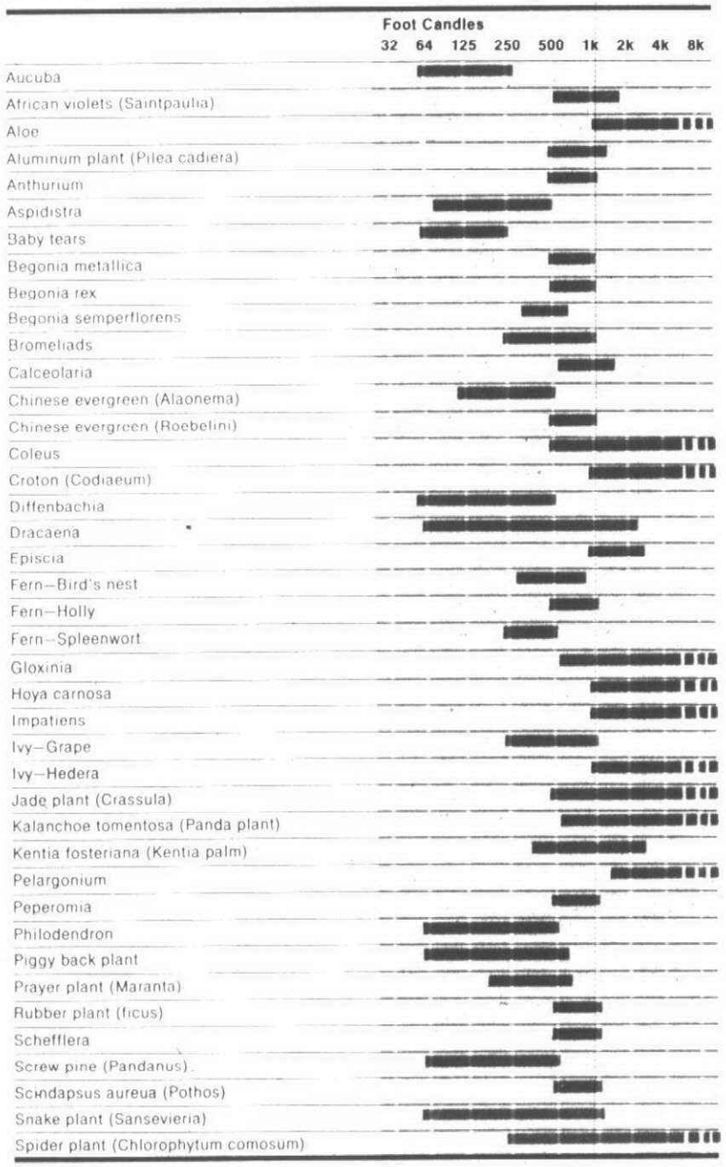

Force daffodils into bloom for Christmas.

Approximate foot candles by location

Illumination requirements for plants

This chart was compiled from data from a number of different sources and is generally based on 12 hours a day of light at a fixed intensity. Those plants shown with ranges extending to 8000 foot candles will generally take some full sun. In window planting situations it is important to provide sufficient ventilation to prevent excessive heat build-up even with plants that can thrive on direct sun exposure.

In the spring you can use it to get an early start on garden vegetables.

North windows are pretty much limited to the indoor foliage plants on a permanent basis, although lots of others will get along if given recovery periods in brighter light, for example, philodendron, diffenbachia, aspidistra, Chinese evergreen, and nepthytis. North light is uniform and dependable and supplemented with artificial sources it will do about anything you might want.

East and West windows may provide from 2 to 4 hours of direct sunlight, enough to get good color from coleus and bloom from impatiens and gloxinia. Croton, osmanthus, campanula should do well. Remember that there is a lot of difference between two hours of early morning sun and four hours of strong afternoon sun.

Light modification

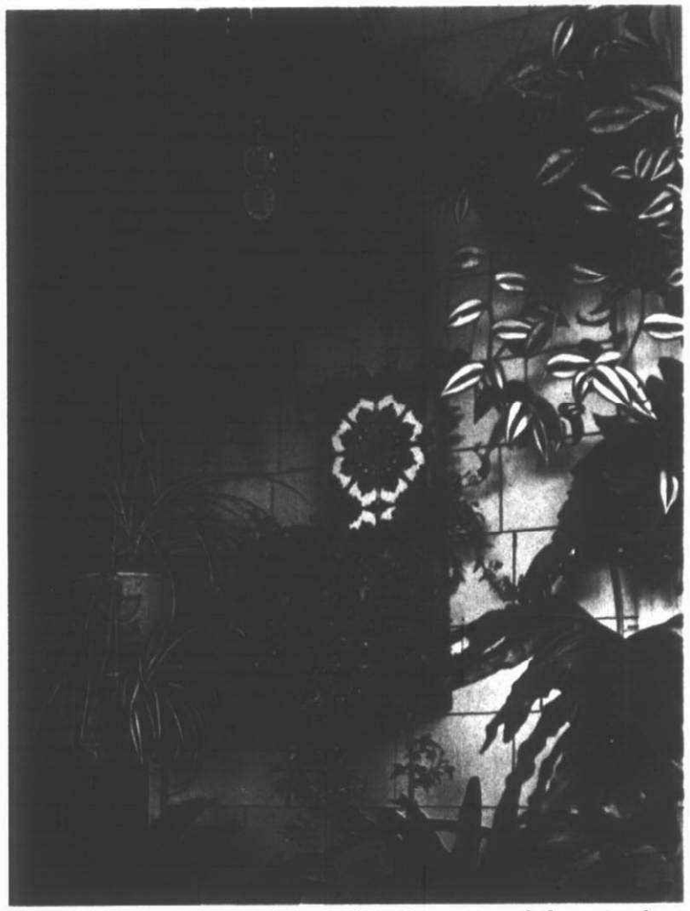

If you want the kind of indoor/outdoor interchangeability that accommodates blooming plants inside and provides for shade loving plants outside, you may have to modulate the outdoor light and augment the indoor light.

To modify outdoor light, increase part-shade area with overhead trellis or awning over the patio, or build a raised wood deck under a high branching tree for pot display. To increase inside light, a simple outside tree pruning may work wonders. The addition of a circular fluorescent tube in a reflector suspended above a table plant may push it over the line, from existing to a really healthy growth. A pair of 40 watt fluorescents can supplement an inadequately lit window or provide a separate growing area independent of the outside light.

Double duty

The idea of potting up outdoor plants for a period of growth indoors is advised with great enthusiasm. However, if you are moving outdoor plants inside for the winter, and the indoor climate differs greatly from the outdoor environment, there may be a week or so in which the plant doesn't look like it's going to live. Don't despair, the plant is adjusting to its new environment. The plant may lose some of its leaves or flowers, but they will be replaced when the plant has adjusted to its indoor climate.

Some candidates for double duty are: ageratum, fibrous begonias, achimenes, browallia, caladiums, balsam, coleus, geraniums and impatiens.

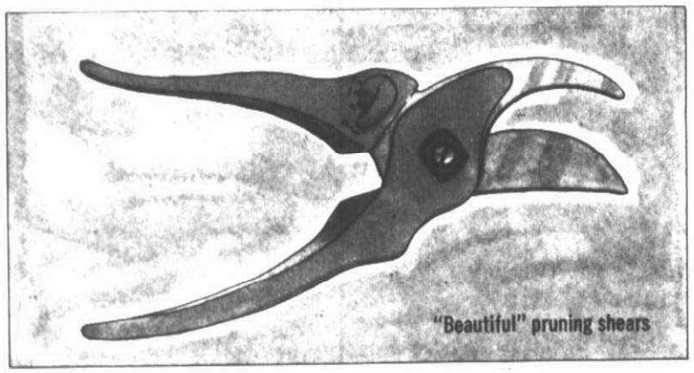

The use of decorative wall boxes, hanging pots and floor stands, can convert a well lit wall area into an instant jungle.

My most useful gadget

"Beautiful" pruning shears

Fishing tackle box

Cordless grass shears

Cordless hedge shears

"Gadget" may be the wrong word for much of the equipment many gardeners find useful. The hoe and shovel can hardly be called gadgets. We use this good gardening word to suggest that there are many garden toys that add to the gardening experience.

Sometimes a garden tool will change one's personality. A gardener we know has a very beautiful pair of pruning shears, he carries them in a leather scabbard, they are the best money can buy. The shears are his gardening companion. He enjoys training plants in espalier fashion. His beautiful shears have made him a garden sculptor.

Then, there are the inventive gardeners. Many a popular manufactured gadget has had its beginning in the home garden. They are the gardeners who analyze every garden operation in the light of how to make it more efficient. He doesn't drag the hose into the flower bed more than twice. First he uses a few stakes in the right places to protect the corners of the bed. And then, he improves on the stakes and we have the hose guides.

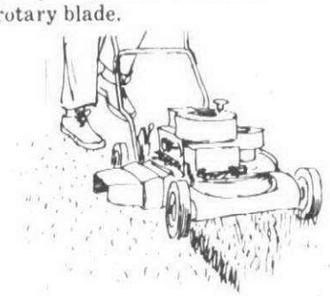

Perhaps you've met the gardener who enjoys using products not intended for the garden. He finds that the old-fashioned ice cream scoop is useful in setting out transplants; a putty knife is a good weeder in small spaces; a fishing tackle box as a carry-all for trowel, weeder, shears, nylon cord, plastic tape and assorted small gardening items.

Manufacturers of garden equipment have never been busier. Battery power gives cordless mobility to grass shears, hedge shears and now to the riding lawn mower.

There's action in drip irrigation equipment. One kit, manufactured by DuPont, is now available at retail outlets. The rotary mower becomes a lawn renovator and thatch remover, with an inexpensive (temporary) addition to the rotary blade.

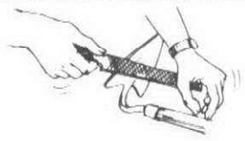

With the warnings against deep cultivation with the hoe and the resultant root chopping, more kinds of scuffle hoes are becoming popular. There are pointed scuffle hoes, hula hoes and pointed push hoes. Note that the Dutch type hoe can also be used as a lawn edger.

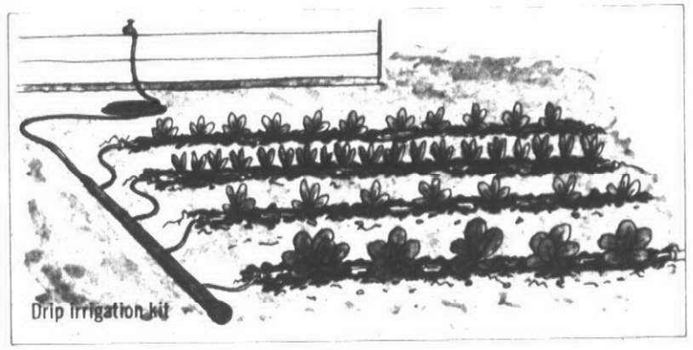

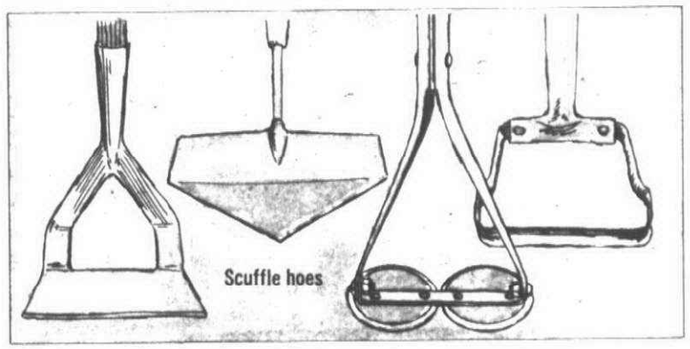

New and old devices find favor with the increasing use of soakers and drip irrigation systems. Siamese hose connector with double shutoff allows you to run combination hose and soakers, or hose and sprinkler. This gadget, as well as quick couplers saves many steps and hose bibb fiddling.

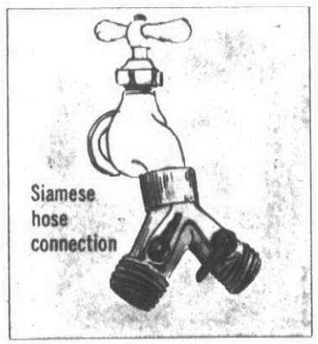

The little sweeper nozzles, with a force of water that will scale a fish, is one of our favorite gadgets. Equally necessary, in our opinion, is a variety of nozzles and water breakers with all types of spray patterns—mist spray, seedling nozzle and adjustable sprays.

Anyway, my most useful gadget is a set of files to keep tools that should have a sharp edge, sharp.

The life of a commercial farmer revolves around the weather. When the farmer plants, when and how much he harvests, (or if he harvests at all) how much he irrigates, or whether or not he needs frost protection, all depend on the weather.

The home gardener confronts the weather on a smaller, more manageable scale. The small weathers clustered around every house and yard, technically called microclimates, will yield to a surprising number of modifications. And modifying the natural climate to protect or further the growth of vegetables is one of the most rewarding exercises in gardening.

On the next four pages we've taken a look at home gardeners and university researchers who are bent upon making plants grow; providing the best possible environment for the best possible results. If their climate is extreme or deficient in some way, these gardeners modify it to better suit the plants' needs. The ways in which they have modified their climates should interest any fellow gardener.

Mulching is one of gardenings oldest techniques. The English word was probably derived from the German vernacular molsch, meaning soft and rotten. It is probable then, that the ancient mulch must have been a litter of straw that gardeners found kept the soil cool and moist. From the very beginning gardeners have used mulches as a means of modifying the growing environment of plants.

Dr. J. W. Courter, an Extension Specialist in Small Fruit and Vegetable Crops at the University of Illinois, and secretary of the National Association of Plastics in Agriculture, describes a mulch as "any substance such as straw, sawdust, plastic or paper spread on the ground to protect the roots of plants from heat, cold, drought, or to keep the fruit clean. Specifically, mulch modifies the soil and air microclimate in which a plant is growing."

A mulch, then, can be either organic or a manufactured material such as polyethylene film (plastic), aluminum foil or paper.

Black plastic. In areas where

Common materials can provide growing climate modification—here newspaper, and tar paper for mulch; plastic jugs for early season frost protection.

early season temperatures are less than ideal for warm weather crops such as melons, eggplant, peppers and summer squash, black polyethylene, used as a mulch, has built itself a solid reputation for increasing yields and speeding up vegetable ripening. Yields of muskmelons in experimental plots mulched with black plastic have been increased up to 4 times over that of non-mulched plants.

When used as a mulch, black plastic increases the temperature of the soil. Researchers usually give this increase in soil temperatures credit for the remarkable speed up of growth, even though the increase is generally in the 3 to 6° range, sometimes only 2°.

The temperature of the black plastic soars high on a warm sunny day and kicks back a great deal of heat to the air above it, rather than transferring it to the soil. Insulating air pockets, between the plastic and the soil surface, retards much of the heat transfer from the black plastic to the soil.

When applying any plastic mulch, make sure that the soil is damp at the time of application so that there is sufficient moisture under the mulch for the mulch to retain. Dry soil should not be mulched unless there is ample water available to soak the beds after mulching.

Subsequent watering through plastic mulches is not a problem and the advent of drip irrigation systems will make watering under mulches a water-saving operation. Users of plastic mulches now take care of water needs by cutting upside-down T-slits in the plastic when watering with sprinklers, or running water through the planting holes, or laying a soaker hose under the plastic.

Clear plastic. Duane Hatch, Extension Agent in Eugene, Oregon brings some of the Oregon State University's research findings to the gardening public through the "Hatch Patch" demonstration garden. Experiments with clear plastic as a mulch in cool spring coastal areas have brought some impressive results:

"A layer of plastic over the soil aids greatly with warm season crops such as tomatoes, melons, peppers and squash. The warming of the soil will promote 10 to 14 days earlier maturity and higher yields with tomatoes. Melons, seeded about the 10th of June gave us ripe cantaloupe and watermelon by mid-September.

"We demonstrated that clear plastic is better than black plastic for our area because the sun's energy warms the soil rather than the top part of the plastic. The weeds were not a major problem under the clear plastic if temperatures of 90° or more occurred to burn off the weeds. In 1974 we aren't getting enough heat to burn off the weeds, and we have had to lift the plastic and do some hand weeding."

Organic mulches. The plastic mulches may have great advantages in increasing crop yields and in weed control, but they in no way deny the value of an organic mulch. Throughout the garden an organic mulch will benefit plant growth in many ways and at the same time give the garden a well-groomed look.

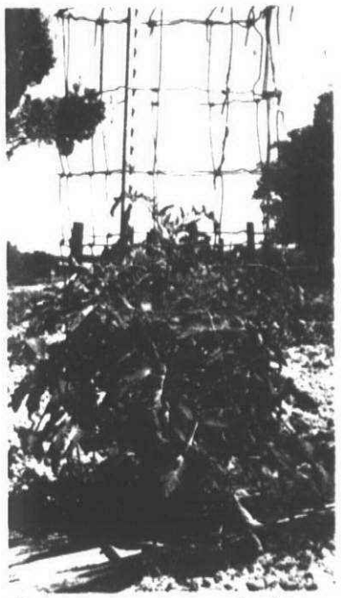

Remember that the values of organic mulches are usually considered summertime values—reducing soil temperatures and water saving. Gardeners who use a yearround mulch in the vegetable garden find it necessary to pull back the mulch in early spring to allow the sun to warm the soil for early seeded crops.

An application of an organic mulch in early spring will slow up the natural warming of the soil as spring advances. As an insulating blanket it reduces solar radiation into the soil. As a result, frost hazards are greater with a mulched bed early in the season.

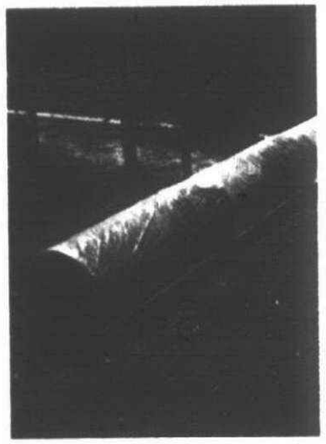

Organic mulches may be peat moss, grass clippings, ground bark or some other natural material, but as the definition of "waste material" changes new mulches may appear to the gardener. If you look around you may find a waste product of agriculture that is peculiar to your area. And local agriculture by-products are usually less expensive than packaged and processed ones. Where grapes are pressed there is pomace. Where there's a cider mill there's apple pomace.

Reflective panels. A determined gardener will go to great lengths to harvest a crop. A prime example of the ingenuity of such gardeners is seen in the photograph on page 28. Intent upon growing corn in a very shaded back garden, this gardener constructed reflective panels to increase the amount of sunlight and direct it into the only available ground space he had. Tall hedges flanked both sides of the prospective corn patch and effectively blocked both the morning and afternoon sun. In the first experiment in 1973, aluminum foil was stapled to plastic and hung on the east and west sides of the planting area. The corn crop was perfect except in the rows next to the hedge. The next year reflective metalized plastic was glued to plywood panels and hinged to a wooden frame. The metalized plastic and the adjustable angle of reflective proved to be more efficient.

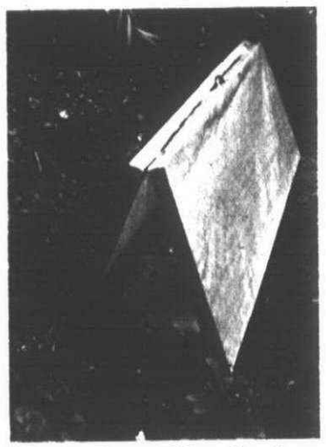

Drip/trickle irrigation. Especially in areas with limited water supplies, the idea of making a little water go a long way is nothing new. But today home gardeners are hearing some new words about irrigation techniques and equipment–such as emitters, spot-spitters, Dew-Hose, Jumbo-oozers, Viaflow, Twin-wall, Drip-Eze are a few.

After years of testing in thousands of acres of orchards, row crops and nursery operations, the drip/trickle system of irrigation is being offered to the home gardener. The systems offered are not fool proof. Manufacturers are changing parts in the systems as more tests are made. But the potential advantages of drip irrigation in shrub and tree plantings, home orchards, vineyards and vegetable gardens are so great that the home garden experiment seems worthwhile.

The principle of drip/trickle irrigation is to supply the plant with an almost constant supply of water at a slow rate from a low pressure system. Depending on the type of system used, the water is either "spit," "dripped," "trickled" or "oozed" at the base of the plant or tree. No matter which system is used, drip/-trickle irrigation uses less water in a more effective way than normal irrigation.

Frost protection. Many different plastic materials make excellent early season frost protection, but before using any kind of plastic for frost protection, be it plastic jugs or plastic film draped over an A-frame, there are a few things the gardener should know.

Where you use such early-season growing aids as row covers and plastic jugs is all important. In areas where temperatures are consistently cool such aids fulfill their function very well. But if you live in an area where a stretch of cool spring weather may be broken by temperatures equal to a hot summer day, the gardener may find a plastic covered plant cooked to death.

Good ventilation is the key to avoid disaster. A row cover, with both ends open, should provide enough ventilation to allow the excessive heat to escape. If there is no ventilation through plastic covers of any kind, the gardener had best remove them on a warm day and replace them at night.

Raised beds. Gardeners who have been denied the luxury of a rich loamy soil have come up with a number of ways to combat the problem, and in doing so have found themselves with other advantages besides "good soil."

If the soil in your area is poor, growing plants above soil is the best answer. The soil raised above the ground level can be held in place with 1 or 2" boards, railroad ties, bricks or other building materials.

If the soil mixture in a raised bed is light-weight, drainage through the soil is good, and with the soil raised above ground level, drainage away from the bed is also possible. Unless the soil around the bed is flooded, the soil in the raised bed will never be water-logged. This can be a big advantage in spring, especially if the weather has been wet and cool, as the soil in a raised bed will warm up and be ready to plant weeks before regular garden soil can be seeded or worked.

Gardeners can also take advantage of beneficial microclimate conditions by planting crops on sloping ground. If there are no slopes in your yard you can create your own.

Railroad ties frame a raised bed of parsley and cabbage.

A southward tilt of the planting ground will increase the amount of sunlight the plants receive. A slant to the north has the opposite effect and creates an artificial cool climate.

And a well built raised bed can support a lot of extras. Side boards can be used to hold wire frames to keep out birds and cats, or plastic covers to increase warmth or protect from the frost.

Coldframes and hotbeds. Longtime gardeners and County Agricultural Agents are quick to recommend the use of coldframes and hot beds for home gardeners. Confined climates are one of a gardeners ways of outwitting the weather. In areas with short growing seasons gardeners can get a jump on the season by starting warm weather crops inside 'confined climates.'

A coldframe is a small greenhouse in principle. Structurally it is a bottomless, glass-covered box, heated only by the sun for the propagation, growing, and protection of plants.

The wooden box is of airtight construction, treated with wood preservative, painted, and sunk into the ground. Its hinged transparent window can be a stock coldframe sash (available from greenhouse supply firms), or an old window or glass door. (You can also build a polyethylene-film-covered frame.)

Fill the planting bed with layers of gravel, straw, sand, and soil. (See diagram.) Orient the coldframe to the south sun, on a well drained site. A fence or wall on the north side is excellent wind protection and reflects additional light and heat into the box. White or silver paint on the inside walls also reflect more light to the plants.

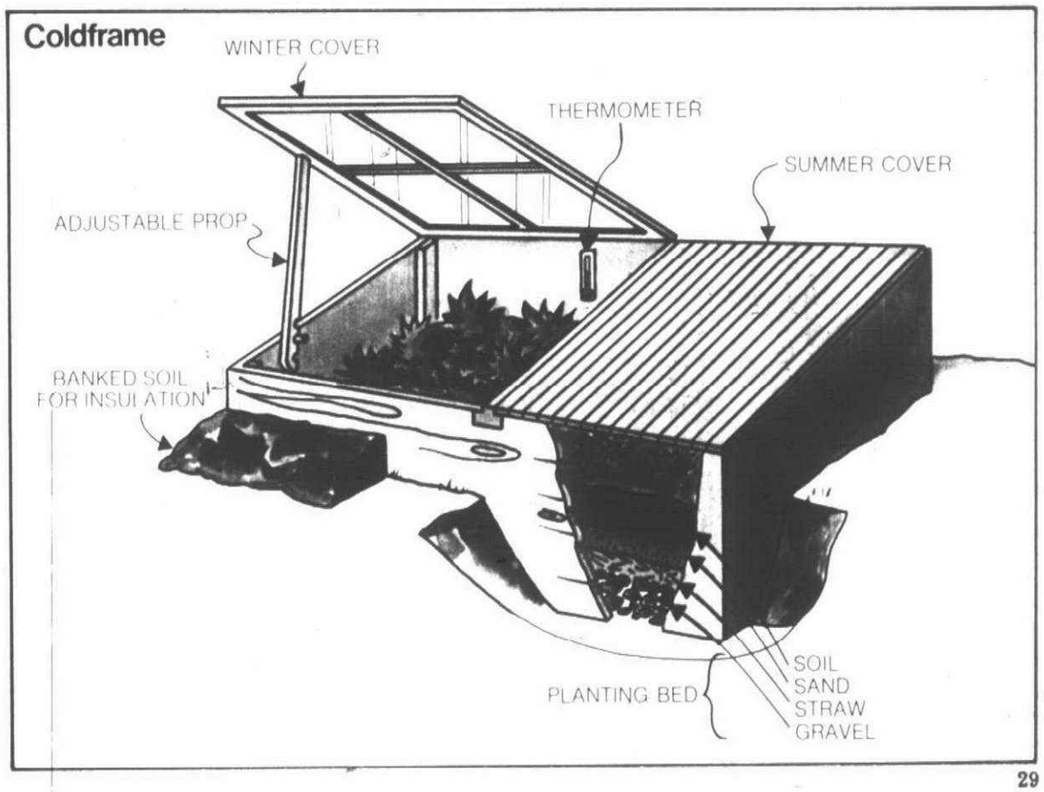

Equip the coldframe with a thermometer. When it reads above the optimum growing level, open the sash to permit air circulation to reduce it. Close it again when temperatures start to drop, to conserve radiation absorbed by the soil.

In cooler weather, insulate the outer sides of the box with banked soil or sawdust. Cover the top with sacks stuffed with straw or excelsior, wood planks, or other insulation during cold nights or chilly overcast weather.

During hot weather, solar radiation to the coldframe can be reduced by shading devices similar to those of a greenhouse. A mist spray can be used to humidify and cool the air.

In milder climates a coldframe provides frost protection and temperatures that keep plants growing through the winter.

It will do the same in cold winter climates if a heating system is added, converting it to a hotbed. In earlier times a layer of fresh horse manure generated the heat, but today the usual source is an electric soil-heating cable. Incandescent lamp bulbs under the glass can also warm the box, but they are not as effective as heating cables.

In autumn think spring

The good gardener needs no urging when it comes to a free and generous use of spring flowering bulbs in the landscape. The more space you have the more dramatic their spring show can be. If you wish to try the unusual or choose special varieties the time to order bulbs from your garden store is in the spring for fall delivery. Only then can you be sure of getting what you want.

Bulbs have the ability to produce as advertised in almost any soil but for best results add generous amounts of organic matter—compost, peat moss and the like—to the soil and work it in deeply.

The first year the number and size of the flowers are set by the size of the bulb. You cannot change them by fertilizing. However, you can influence the leaf growth with fertilizer. Keep the leaves growing as long as you can. The more leaf growth, the more food is stored in the bulb for the next season's flowers.

Last year we indulged ourselves and planted more than two dozen varieties of daffodils. Most of them are carefully displayed in the daffodil gallery you see here. They come in all sizes and many graceful forms. As each variety came into flower we tried to analyze its beauty, compare it to other varieties and guess what the breeder had in mind when he created it. At the end of the season we concluded that every kind could win a place in our garden, somewhere.

Blessed with hundreds of daffodils we had the pleasure of using them in dozens of ways.

Our most successful plantings were where we used daffodils in unexpected situations. For example, a grouping of yellow and bicolor varieties in a ground cover of low-growing junipers.

Lettuce, especially the frilly 'Salad Bowl' and 'Green Ice' is beautiful with daffodils. A row of red chard and a row of daffodils gives the vegetable patch a touch of magic.

Planning combinations of daffodils and spring flowers or vegetables is one of the best fall pastimes. Some of the old-time surefire spring pictures are:

Yellow daffodils and blue pansies or blue violas.

Yellow daffodils and forget-me-nots.

White daffodils and red Darwin tulips.

The gray dusty miller and yellow daffodils get along beautifully together.

Since the bulbs are planted in October and the pansies, violas or other bulb ground covers are planted in the spring, it's best to mark where the bulbs are planted with a rock or short stake.

the bulb. (This will allow for adequate root development.) The container must have a drainage hole at the bottom. Use a light planter mix. Plant the bulbs shoulder to shoulder for full effect. The tips of the bulbs should protrude above the soil surface. Water thoroughly by setting container in a pail of water and letting it soak until the surface of the soil feels moist.

(2) Place containers where they can get 10 to 12 weeks of "cold" treatment—temperatures between 40-50 degrees. Any spot that's cold and dark is satisfactory. An unheated cellar or vegetable storage unit is ideal. A covered cold frame outdoors will do the job. Outdoors pots should be covered with peat moss or sawdust or shredded polystyrene. This material never freezes, is light weight, allows water to pass through rapidly and the bulbs can be inspected at any time during the storage period. The purpose of the storage period is to give the bulbs the chilling they require and to develop a strong root system. Roots require moisture for growth. Soil should be moist when containers go into storage and kept moist throughout the storage treatment.

(3) When the sprouts of the bulbs are 2 to 5 inches high and the roots can be seen at the drainage hole, place the container in a cool 60-degree room. After a week or two they are ready to take normal room temperatures.

Plant anytime from October to December. It's a good idea to stagger your planting to get a continuous supply of flowers. Plant October 1 for late January flowering; in mid-October for February color; in mid-November for March and April flowering.

Keep sprouting bulbs cool and moist until time to bring indoors for forcing into bloom. These daffodils are ready to bring inside.

Colorful daffodils brighten an otherwise bleak winter view. Keep flowering plants as cool as possible indoors and keep soil evenly moist.

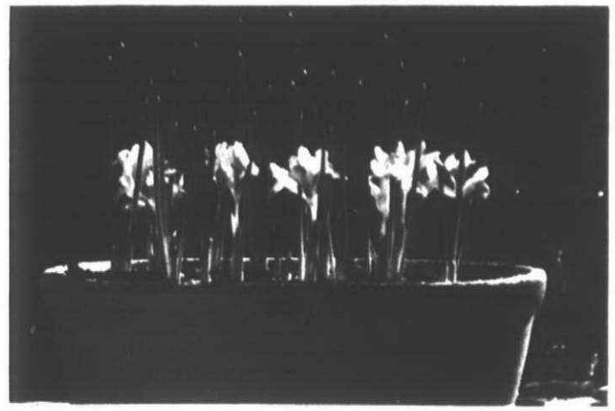

After flowers fade, put bulbs (with foliage still on) in an out of the way place so they can continue growing to store up energy in the bulb.
